SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

This year's Budget is essentially a grocery budget. Everything named in it, except malt and certain preparations containing spirits, falls under the classification of wet or dry groceries. The pressure which brought about an amendment to the Tariff Act at all was exerted solely by the weight of the great staple of the grocery trade, sugar. Any changes in the duty upon other goods were consequent upon the mere disturbance which attended the removal of the sugar duty or were called for to fill the yawning void which it left in the revenue. The duty on syrups has been lowered because the duty on the raw material of them has been taken off. The duty on molasses has been modified. The duty on refined sugar has been reduced because of the removal of that on the raw material. The duty on salt has been reduced to one-half. To make up for these losses 5c. a pound has been added to the excise duty on manufactured tobacco, and 5c. a pound to the customs duty on manufactured tobacco, while the duties on malt and spirits have been advanced. The country will still be short about two millions in its revenue. Retrenchment in the expenditure is the equivalent the Government proposes for this shrinkage in the national income. The first saving will be in the Customs Department itself, where there will be a big reduction in the yearly outlay for handling raw sugar, which hereafter will require a comparatively small part of the customs service it had to have when dutiable.

* * * *

The abolition of the duty on raw sugar was a measure almost rendered necessary by the drift of circumstances. Three months ago the United States gave free sugar to its people, and although Canada is not bound to imitate that country, yet, it is necessary that she keep pace with it in all economical movements. There is some rivalry between the United States and Canada for the best class of immigrants, and the most potent argument with that class is which is the cheaper country to live in. We aim also to make the country as cheap to those who live in it as the United States is, and to keep the duty on sugar would give a tremendous advantage to the United States in its bid for settlers both from this country and abroad. The lifting of a tax of three and a half millions not only from the shoulders of the producers but from those of their wives and children, is a popular and a timely act.

* * * *

Heretofore the grocery trade has been too philanthropical, and by denying itself has done what it could to bring cheap sugar to the masses. Now that the Government has undertaken that paternal role, why should the trade continue in it? The laudable and patriotic desire to make the price a man pays for his sugar a rivet to keep him in this country can not now be pleaded as a reason why retailers should forego their profit on sugar. The trade will have more sugar to handle than ever. A better price ought to be got for it. At one swoop the Government can melt 2c. a pound off the price of sugar, and can take from the total yearly sugar outlay of our population $3,650,000. If the yearly profits of the refiners, the jobbers and the retailers of sugar were all put together, they would probably not amount to half this sum. So much heretofore has revenue had the advantage over trade

* * * *

As the removal of the duty is unlikely, for some time, at least, to be generally taken advantage of by the trade for the betterment of prices, there is no other way in which the trade can be benefited by it. From 1½ to 2c. a pound on sugar, represents between two-sevenths and one-third of the total amount laid out for sugar. There will, therefore, be a smaller burden of debt to be taken up at the end of every thirty days. There will also be an equal reduction in the volume of receipts from consumers, so that the grocer in that particular will be no better than he was before. The wholesale trade will apparently be the gainers, as only about two-thirds of the original amount lost on sugar through the failure of retailers will now be in peril. But this proceeds on the idea that consumption will not be enhanced, which is an improbable supposition. Under present prices it cannot but be increased, and the amount of money paid out by the people for sugar for one year from the present may be equal to what was paid last year.

* * * *

The sugar market has now got completely out of the deadlock into which it was thrown by the combination of forces that struck it last week. Anticipation of the change had virtually muzzled and famished the demand for weeks; the strawberry crop could be saved only by sugar, and its most critical week had arrived. So much for the demand. The supply, on the other hand, had ceased. Then the Budget came down. The long quiescent demand became ravenous, but there had to be delay until stock was taken of all the sugar in bond at the refineries. Thus the supply was kept in curb so far as this market was concerned till Monday morning. In that interval United States refined, which is now admissable at eight-tenths of a cent per pound, might have been imported to lessen the strain here. That, however, was made a less available source of relief because of the fact that nearly all the trade had their orders in at our own refineries before the change.

MEN OF THE TIMES.

MR. F. C. IRELAND.

Take each one's censure but reserve thy judgment.—SHAKESPEARE.

F. C. Ireland, B. Sc., is an Ontario man by birth and education. After a good ordinary schooling he attended Victoria College for three years, but owing to ill health did not take his degree then, but left off study for a few years and travelled a good deal through the United States, the Maritime Provinces and in Europe. Afterwards he entered into mercantile and milling business at Lachute, near Montreal. In connection with his business he was a good deal in Montreal city and resided there for some years. His large business engagements did not prevent his return to study, and he wrote considerable for the leading newspapers and magazines. Some few years ago he wrote and published an ethical work, of which 1000 copies sold readily, and which has since been revised and is in demand. He has recently completed another work which is an ingenious transposition of Milton's Paradise Lost into a fascinating story, and is said by one who has gone over the MS. to be of a high literary character and one that will cause some stir when it appears in print.

For several years, while in business at Lachute, he was President of the Liberal Conservative Association of the county of Argenteuil, and so managed the electorate that, though a close constituency, a victory was gained at every election during the time he controlled the association. On one occasion he was unanimously selected by the convention, to be the candidate for election to the House of Commons, but this honor he declined. He was an acting Justice of the Peace and had the satisfaction of no appeals ever having been made from the numerous judgments he passed in the magistrate's court. He was also a school commissioner, holding all these offices until he removed to his native province and took up his residence here in Toronto in 1887. He never ceased pursuing a course of systematic study. He has devoted considerable attention to dietetics and hygiene, and is now professor of hygiene in one of the colleges. Some ten years ago while suffering from dyspepsia, he began to experiment on the various processes of converting starch into dextrine, with the view of pre-digestion. Starch, which is the most abundant material in the vegetable world next to wood, is at the same time the most difficult to digest. Cereals contain about 70% of starch, and his idea was to bring the grain or the manufactured cereals into a state of heat and moisture to resemble the condition as near as possible, through which the food passes in the great laboratory of the stomach, while under the process of digestion. This was an exceedingly interesting study, and by no means an easy work to accomplish, especially when it had to be done in a manner that would not permit the use of chemicals nor interfere with the flavor of the prepared foods. With indomitable perseverance he determined to overcome the obstacles, and to do so he visited New York city twice in search of information on the best known means of pre-digesting the food that comes into daily consumption. While pursuing the analysis of the various foods, he became alarmed at the large percentage of tuberculosis in cows from whose milk the general public were supplied. That fifty per cent. of the cows in large cities and towns should have tuberculosis and the germs of disease carried to the human system of thousands of people, through milk laden with bacteria, for a while diverted his attention from cereals to the great necessity of treating milk in a manner that would destroy the deadly microbes in it before it was used in the family. But finding this not so practical a sphere as the one he had started out to accomplish, he returned to the work of producing upon strictly scientific principles, a high class of prepared cereals for general use, that would be delicious in flavor, readily assimilate, supply the wastes of the system and be so easy of digestion that an infant or the most delicate stomach could easily digest them. After nearly two years of experiments he succeeded. A patent and general trade mark were secured at Ottawa, and what is now so widely known as "Our National Foods" were launched upon the market. They were received with the greatest favor. Every intelligent person and especially the feeble and delicate, spoke of them in the highest terms of approval. The Montreal Medical Journal said "the cereals were treated in the light of all the scientific progress of the times." The medical profession generally said everything in their favor. Mr. Ireland soon found all his energies taxed to keep up with the demand. In 1887 he decided that a large city possessed far greater facilities for the manufacture and distribution of such goods than a small place like Lachute. His Montreal friends urged upon him the advantages of that city. He acknowledged these advantages and the importance of a large social and business connection and the pleasure of being amongst old friends, but he took time to decide. He was convinced that a large and growing business had started, and though unique, it was designed to develop into great proportions. There were also the promptings of philanthropy as the benefits to the physical constitution of the individual would result in a national blessing; the strengthening influence of brain, bone, muscle and nerve of the people, would be so much greater by the use of a proper diet.

With this in view, he again visited New York city, where the facilities of manufacture, the immense market for the goods among a nation of dyspeptics, and other great attractions, were considered. Yet there were drawbacks. The grain was not so good, especially the wheat, being considerably deficient in gluten compared with Canadian wheat. He was not of that class of persons, either, who think the United States is a paradise for all active Canadians. So he returned with the resolve that some city in Canada should be the centre of what he considered would be a world-wide business. Toronto had its drawings, and like a magnet of powerful influence, was not to be resisted. His native province was always dearer than any other land, so he moved to this city that same year, where the new business soon extended to such proportions that two years later it was put into a limited liability company, and the large mills built that now adorn the city near the C. P. R. station at North Toronto. The public appreciation of these prepared cereals increases only in proportion to the advance of knowledge upon the subject of hygiene. People in the past have not given serious thought to their diet and its effects on the present and future welfare of growing children. They have lived to eat instead of eating to live. They have thought more of their palate than their health. They have studied how to feed the land, their horses and pigs so as to get the best value and service, but not how to feed themselves and their children, who are expected to live, grow and be healthy by eating anything and everything that is pleasing to the eye or the palate. If they considered thoughtfully the fact that in one pound of prepared cereals upon this system there was more nourishment than in two pounds of beefsteak, costing five times more money, they might call a halt and enquire if such was a fact. So with the food they eat. Little attention is given to what it consists of, how it is prepared, and what the effect is upon the system or the difference in the diet of a person of sedentary habits and one in the open air at hard manual work. Mr. Ireland has done more to educate the people on these subjects than any other man in this country, and we hope he will get his reward.

THE POSITION OF BARREL SALT.

How much of the reduction in the duty upon salt will go to the benefit mediately of the dealer and ultimately of the consumer, has yet to be shown by the effect it has upon importation from the United States. Under the old duty the United States manufacturers could not do business here, and now that the duty is reduced to half what it was, it is not a certainty that a fall in our manufacturers' prices corresponding to the reduction in the duty will be necessary to keep out United States competition. Even a lower duty than 5c. would probably have sufficed to protect the native manufacture. The staple salt, that about which farmers have made the loudest outcry, is barrel salt. It would be the predominating interest in any proposed salt tariff.

Barrel salt is made the basis of the bulk of the profit both in the United States and in this country. United States exporters, therefore, aim to keep up prices on it. The same exporters are also at a freight disadvantage. They have a greater distance to ship, and they are discriminated against 2c. a hundredweight by our railways. Canadian salt comes from the wells to Toronto for 10c., while United States salt comes from Windsor to Toronto for 12c. a hundred-weight. The circumstances of aiming to keep up the price on barrel salt, the extra distance on which freight has to be paid, and the extra rate imposed on United States salt by our railways tend to limit United States exportation to this country, though the duty is lowered 7½c. a hundred-weight or 21c. a barrel. Further, the duty on the barrel is 20 per cent. of its value, and as the value is usually rated 25c., that means an extra duty of 5c. or a total duty of 26c. on an imported barrel of salt.

The salt combine has incurred odium from the agricultural portion of the community because of its steady maintenance of prices on barrel salt, and that odium no doubt was the primary impulse to the removal of half the duty. One reason why the brunt of prices has fallen upon the farmers is that nothing could be made on coarse salt, and the association therefore turned to barrel salt for its profits. Barrel salt being what the farmers buy, they had to pay the advance. The reason money could not be made on coarse salt, such as is used by meat-packers, etc., was because of the large quantity of Liverpool coarse salt imported into the country. This answered the packers' purpose and became a displacing competitor of Canadian coarse salt. It seems strange that a foreign salt, having the expense of transit from so distant a port, could compete with advantage against salt produced in the country. But according to the tariff Liverpool coarse salt is admitted free, when it is for the use of Maritime fishermen This practically let it all in free, for it came up here and was almost exclusively used for a time by our packers and curers. Further, this salt had only a nominal ocean freight to pay. It was always shipped on vessels that would otherwise return light to Canadian ports, and as these must have ballast, they were glad to carry Liverpool coarse salt for the cost of handling in and out. This was the case up to three years ago. It has since had to pay a light freight, and has now got pretty well crowded off the market.

The farmer had up to the present to pay $1.55 per barrel, while in pre-combine times he paid only 90c. This difference is partly explained by the fact that the standard weight of a barrel is now fixed by law at 280 lbs., while in those times it might be and very commonly was 140 lbs. A hundred of the old-time barrels could be put in a car and get through for the same freight as 80 barrels now. It was well, however, to reduce the duty, as it appears evident it was formerly excessive and calculated to strengthen the position of a combine that should be left to its internal coherence for its strength.

PARIS GREEN AND HELLEBORE.

Retailers throughout the country who are not druggists are liable to forget that the trade in hellebore and Paris green is regulated by law. These articles are poisons, and commerce in them is subject to the restrictions that druggists must not over-step. Hellebore is permitted to be sold by no one but druggists. The demand for it becomes active at this season, and nothing is more natural than that owners of gardens should repair to general merchants, grocers, and hardwaremen for supplies. But these traders can not legally make sale of hellebore. The penalty for selling it is a fine of from $20 to $50. It must be left severely alone. If it is not, some druggist within reach will be likely to hear of any transgression of the law and bring the offender to book, for the druggist naturally wants all the trade a paternal law gives him the monopoly of.

Paris green may be sold by any trader, but neglect of the conditions imposed by law is too costly to be found guilty of. Storekeepers are sometimes so careless as to sell Paris green as they do tea, nails, etc., merely tying up the required weight and receiving the pay or charging the item. Every instance of doing business that way is punishable by a fine of twenty to fifty dollars. The trader must keep a register, a book in which every sale is entered, with the following particulars under marked headings: The date, the quantity bought, the purpose for which it is bought, the signature of the purchaser, the initials of the salesman. Every parcel sold must be marked "Poison." If this care is taken in the case of every sale, the trade in Paris green will be a perfectly safe one.

Detectives are on the lookout here and there to catch transgressors of either the law relating to the sale of hellebore or of that relating to Paris green. The College of Pharmacy which aims at the protection of the drug trade, may be trusted to prosecute directly or through its agents every offender. Local druggists are not apt to give information, even when requested, to their neighbors in other trades. They prefer to see the latter blunder into a conviction of breach of the law, be mulcted for a fine that will absorb the season's profits on the trade, and thus be driven in disgust from having anything more to do with it. Wholesalers in this city know something about the "spotter" as a visitor, some of them having paid liberally for his unceremonious calls. He is usually an unobtrusive person, not desirous of causing you any unnecessary trouble in serving him, and exceedingly liable to get away before you have got through the formalities of the transaction. The whiskey detective is not more confidential and guileless in manner.

While upon the subject of Paris green it may be said that the lowest priced is usually the dearest for the trader to have anything to do with. The quantity of spurious stuff that is sold is very large. The pure can be distinguished from all varieties of adulterated by spreading it out on a sheet of paper. It will be found free from any white or gritty substance. There is little trouble in detecting the presence of land-plaster or other alien elements. The pure Paris green is the cheaper in about this proportion: that it takes about half the quantity at a difference of about a quarter the value in favor of the buyer. Not being diluted with land plaster, etc., every grain paid for becomes deadly food for the bug.

THE PEDLARS WANT CHEAPER LICENSES.

Last summer the Toronto Association moved in the direction of higher licenses for the privilege of peddling on Toronto's streets, and made recommendations to the Markets and License Committee of the City Council to that end. Although their figures were very reasonable and below those charged in other cities the committee cut the figures down. The association worked hard and finally gained the victory, the licenses being placed at an advance on what they were before. They also succeeded in having the by-law amended so that pedlars should wear badges. The pedlars agreed to the figures providing the association should take no steps to again increase the prices this year. This agreement was a tacit one between the parties, understood but not placed in writing. In the face of these facts the pedlars made advances to the committee on markets and license some two weeks ago for certain reductions. The secretary of the association got on to it, however, and reported the move at the last meeting, but believing that nothing would be done in council the association remained inactive. The matter was not dropped, however, the pedlars were prepared and last Friday appeared before the Market and License committee to press the question. The Secretary of the Association heard of it on Thursday afternoon, but what was to be done? There was no time to notify or call meetings, and he concluded to hustle around and get a deputation to meet the pedlars before the committee. The result was, that after speaking to and calling for help from fifteen members, every one of whom acknowledged the gravity of the position, a double corporal's guard appeared at the meeting, consisting of the secretary and an ex-president of the association. But as it happened, fortune favored the association. Owing to an informality the pedlars were unable to get their petition before the committee, and had to give it up. Some day the members will regret not having a municipal committee, whose duty it should be to watch the action of parties appearing before the council and report to the association all matters affecting the interests of the trade.

THE PRICES OF SYRUPS.

Syrups have not to contract to the full extent of the difference in the value of sugar that the tariff makes. They had already gone part of the way before the change in the duty, as they were affected by the price of United States syrups. These latter had gone down in price as a consequence of the freeing of raw sugar on the first of April, and were being, therefore, produced at a price which enabled refiners to export to this country in the face of prices that held some time ago. These prices had to be shaded to meet United States quotations, and thus had gone part of the way on that descent which free sugar here now permits. About ½c. per lb. further is all they had yet to go to bring them into equitable relation to the price of sugar. The protection given to the manufacture of syrup was not so effective as was that given to the manufacture of refined sugar before the Budget, as the former could and the latter could not be imported without loss.

THE BANANA TRADE.

Drying bananas for shipment, says an exchange, has been tested in Trinidad, West Indies, with marked success. A report received by the Bureau of American Republics sets forth that the cost of producing a bunch of bananas weighing fifty-two pounds, including the purchase of land, clearing, draining, planting, weeding, cutting, drying fuel, boxes and packing for market, would average only 53c. The fruit in drying loses one-third of its weight. When dried it sells readily at 16c. a pound. Allowing for the loss of weight this would yield $2.72 a bunch —a clear profit for the grower of $2.19. An order for several hundred weight of dried fruit at 6d. (12c.) a pound, for the London market, has been received at Trinidad. Even at this price a handsome profit would be realized. An actual sale of nearly a hundred boxes of the dried fruit has been recently made in Canada at 20c. a pound, and the Canadians are asking for more at the same price. Over 100,000 plants have been distributed in Trinidad and Tobago within the last two years. The purchasers were principally large planters, and there is every indication that the industry will be pursued on an extensive scale, and that dried bananas will soon be an important item in the commerce of the West Indies.

AS CHEAP AS DIRT.

[Missus Smith learns that the "dooty" has been taken off sugar.]

Jenny, get your hat and borry
Missus Simpson's copper kettle,
Such berries! I'd be awful sorry
To spoil 'em in a pot of metal.
Hark what I say to you, Jenny,
Don your lilac-braided skirt;
Glory, hallelu, Jenny!
Sugar's just as cheap as dirt!

Thro' the fields for fruit we'll forage,
Jack and Jim an'you an'me:
We'll all use sugar on our porridge
And put some in the hired-man's tea;
We'll sweeten up the rhubarb stew—
Another handful wouldn't hurt.
Oh, Jenny, Jenny—halle-loo!
Sugar's just as cheap as dirt.

Jenny, don't git in a flutter.
Git that kettle right away;
We'll fill the crocks with apple butter
When the hens begin to lay.
Get the wondrous tidings thro'yer,
Isn't Mr. Forster pert?
Jenny. Jenny, halleluyer!
Sugar's just as cheap as dirt.

While yer gone I'll stem the berries
Scrub the kitchen till it's glittern;
Good land! we'll hev a bar'l of cherries
And can a wagon load of citron.
Plums an' peaches—apples, too;
A crock of pumpkin wouldn't hurt.
Jenny, Jenny—halle-loo!
Sugar's just as cheap as dirt.

PICNIC AND EXCURSION NOTES.

A number of wholesale and manufacturing firms outside the city have contributed liberally towards prizes for the London (Ont.) grocers' picnic, which is to be held on the 22nd inst.

The Hamilton retail grocers have decided to hold their picnic on the 15th, not in Exhibition Park, Toronto, as was reported last week, but in Oakville.

The Toronto Retail Grocers' Association holds its picnic on the 29th inst. This year it will be on the Island.

The Toronto Commercial Travellers' Association has fixed on the 22nd inst. as the day for its excursion to the Falls.

NOTES TAKEN ON THE ROAD.

Notwithstanding the great reputation of Georgian Bay black bass and other fish caught in those waters, I noticed on Muskoka wharf, Gravenhurst, last week, amongst the outfit of campers going to the islands, a number of packages of Fearman's celebrated Star brand hams and bacon, which have become quite essential to a camper's complete outfit. Besides, one gets sick of fish, but never of Fearman's deliciously cured hams and bacon.

A CORRECTION ENDORSED AND ALLOWED.

TORONTO, June 24, 1891.

DEAR MR. EDITOR,

Will you kindly note in your next issue that a statement duly signed by the party who issued the pamphlet in which the Sunlight people are interested, declares that the circulation was 50,000 not 3,500. Is it not fair to them to accept their statement in the absence of proof to the contrary? The trouble in so far as the grocers are concerned was settled promptly and satisfactorily, and the matter is not worth, I think, further discussion.

I am pleased with THE GROCER. No merchant can afford to do without it.

Yours truly, WM. G. SYKES.

A NEW LONDON WHOLESALE HOUSE.

LONDON, Ont., June 22, 1891.

Until within the last few years the wholesale grocery trade of London numbered but two firms, but of late one after another of the larger retail stores have lost one or more of their senior members, they having either sold out their interest to remaining partners of the firm or others who are gradually working up to what is the ambition of the majority of retail grocers—viz., a wholesale business. We have now five strictly wholesale grocery firms in the city, all of them good and reliable. Among the recent additions to the list of wholesale grocers is the firm of Messrs. Elliott, Marr & Co., who have opened up a fine stock of all lines of groceries and grocers' sundries, and although their representatives have been but a few days on the road, they are meeting with good success and their sales are better than anticipated. This is partly accounted for by their thorough knowledge of the business. The Messrs. Elliott Bros. as a retail jobbing firm were among the oldest grocers in the city, they having carried on the same business over twenty-five years. They are among the pioneer grocers. They were always reliable, and on disposing of the retail business and forming a partnership with Mr. Marr, they have taken a gentleman well known on the road. Many of our readers know him. He started as clerk some twenty years ago in one of the largest retail grocery stores in the city, and from the schooling obtained there, graduated to the road. He is thoroughly posted in the business. Give their representatives a hearty welcome when they call, and when they leave see that they are made happy by having taken your order for a nice bill of goods.

"SIDE LINES."

In considering the question of Side Lines due thought must be given to the competition likely to be met and also the means of supply for the particular line you desire to introduce. If your store is remote from a village where no drug store is kept, by all means put in a good line of drugs and medicines, especially proprietory goods, which may be advertised in the newspapers which circulate in your immediate locality. Of course you would not keep such a stock as would enable you to put up a physician's prescription unless yourself or one of your clerks had sufficient knowledge of pharmacy to make it perfectly safe. But there are hundreds of drugs which are used extensively in every family and which can be dispensed with as much safety by the merchant as sugar and pay a very large and handsome profit. Aside from the monetary gain to the merchant is the great accommodation to his patrons to have the various simple remedies within easy reach. Having thus shown the desirability of the country merchant keeping a judicious assortment of medicines the question arises, What should constitute the stock of a merchant who has no facilities for compounding prescriptions and who is located in one of our many country hamlets? Newspapers to-day circulate in every household in the land, and they are all flooded with advertisements of medicinal preparations, each one of which is a specific for some grave difficulty. These advertisements have created a large demand for this class of goods. Very many have achieved national reputation and have become as familiar as household words. This branch of the business has increased so rapidly during the past few years that all our leading jobbing houses have been compelled to add a drug department to their business. The class of goods put up by these jobbing houses are in active demand in every locality. In this class might be mentioned castor oil, Jamaica ginger, hive syrup, ipecac, squills, laudanum, paregoric, nitre, peppermint, glycerine, sweet oil, magnesia, liniments, quinine, plasters, worm confections, etc. This list might be lengthened very greatly, but enough are enumerated above to give a general idea of what should be kept.

In proprietary articles, I would advise the keeping of goods made by such manufacturers as have extensively advertised their products all over the country. In addition to bottled goods, which the merchant keeps, I should by all means keep such goods as tinct. arnica, paregoric, alcohol, vanilla, lemon, camphor, etc., in bulk, using a half-pint graduate for measuring the same. This can be procured from any house which wholesales drugs. A small pair of drug scales weighing from one grain upwards will be found essential to weigh out quinine and such goods as are in form of a powder, and which the customer may desire in that way instead of the standard preparation. Three hundred dollars judiciously expended will make for an ordinary country store a showing in the line of drugs and medicines which would surprise the owner, and this investment will return a far better percentage of profit than three times the amount invested in any other class of goods. Then, again, it is a class of goods that are not perishable, and when properly displayed add very much to the effect of your general stock. If located in a farming community, be sure to keep in connection with your department such articles as are generally used in compounding horse powders, liniments, etc. Every farmer has his own recipe for condition powders and horse liniments, but they are universally made of the same material though in different proportions. Keep the following roots and herbs, buying in lots of three to five pounds each: Elecampane, saltpetre, sulphur, anise seed, foenigreek, ginger, antimony, flaxseed, caraway, etc, and in liquids—turpentine, oil spike, nitre, ammonia, origanum. These articles will enable you to supply all the demands made upon you for the purposes named. Do not hastily put in your stock of new preparations which have had but little advertising; wait until the demand has been created and then supply it. Buy sparingly at first; bear in mind that proprietary articles can be bought in quarter dozen lots, and I would advise buying in these small quantities until the experimental stage has been passed.—American Grocer.

THE BAG TRADE.

For quite a number of years past, the immense trade in jute bags from Calcutta has been handled entirely from San Francisco, that being the nearest point to Calcutta from which there were regular shipping facilities. However, since the inauguration of the Canadian Pacific fast line between here and the Orient, all this is changed, and by a practical experiment it has been proven that the business can to a large extent be done from here. There are now en route on the Empress of Japan no less than 100,000 jute bags imported direct from Calcutta by Steeves, Burpee & Co., who with commendable enterprise have taken the initiative in this matter. They have bought their supply direct and are now selling throughout the country. At no very distant day the trade in these bags will be a most important one, for from Vancouver the whole of the Northwest and Manitoba supply can be handled. The shipment now on the way for Steeves, Burpee & Co. is the first one to this point, and it is to be hoped it will be followed by others. In order to store this large quantity in bond, the firm above mentioned are now having built a bonded warehouse on their own premises, so that the expense of outside storage may be saved.—Vancouver World.

RULES GOVERNING EMPLOYEES.

The following rules govern a large retail house in New York, which may be of use to some of the leading houses in this country :

RULE 1. Keep your eyes on the front door. Customers should be waited on promptly and pleasantly.

2. Wait on children as politely as you do on grown people. They are our future customers.

3. Salesmen, when disengaged, will take position near the front door, instead of the back. Customers do not come in at the rear.

4. Don't stand outside the front door when at leisure. It is an excellent notice to competitors and customers that trade is dull.

5. Salesmen are paid for waiting on customers, and are not expected to turn them over to the boys, or new men who are learning the business, while they busy themselves arranging or putting away goods.

6. Don't take a customer away from another salesman until he is through with him.

7. Don't turn a customer over to another clerk, if possible to avoid it, except for the dinner hour.

8. Go for business in every direction ; in the store or out of it ; wherever you see a chance to make a sale, work for it with all your might. Rustle !

9. Salesmen will sell at marked prices. Do not go to office for a cut price. It always makes trouble.

10. At retail the dozen price is to be allowed only when the customer takes a half dozen of each kind, or more. Less than half dozen, in all cases, to be at price for each.

11. Sorting up a line of goods allowed to make the quantity, the highest dozen price of the lot to be charged, when a half dozen or more are bought.

12. Clerks of other dealers are to be charged regular retail prices. If the houses they work for buy the goods for them it is a different matter.

13. Don't send a customer up stairs or down by himself.

14. Salesmen will avoid the responsibility of trusting customers whose credit is unknown to them by referring all such cases to the manager. Extending credit without authority makes the salesmen responsible for the amount.

15. In opening a new account get the business and post-office address of the customer correctly.

16. Salesmen are expected to sell the goods we have, not the goods we have not.

17. Salesmen are responsible for their mistakes and any expense attending their correction.

18. If you have a charge to make, enter it before waiting on another customer; your memory is apt to be defective, and the sale forgotten before it is entered.

19. Clerks receiving change from the desk will count the same and see if correct before handing it to the customer. Always hand the cash mem. with the money to the cashier.

20. If you know of an improvement of any kind, suggest it at once to the manager; it will be impartially considered.

21. Keep retail stock full and complete on the shelves, so as to avoid detaining customer. Notify each man in charge of a division, when you find anything short in it.

22. Always put the stock in order when through waiting on customers.

23. Each clerk is expected to see that his department is kept clean and in perfect order.

24. Use the early part of the day and the last hour before closing, in sorting and straighteniug up.

25. Prices are not to be cut. Report every cut price by other firms to the manager after the customer is gone, unless he is a well known and regular customer, in which case report at once.

26. Do not smoke during business hours, in or about the store.

27. Employees are requested to wear their coats in the store. It is not pleasant for a lady to have a gentleman waiting on her in his shirt sleeves, or with his hat on.

28. Employees are expected to be on hand promptly at the hour of opening.

29. Do not leave the store by the rear door.

30. Employees will remain until the hour of closing, unless excused by the manager.

31. The company will ask of you as little work after regular hours as possible. When demanded by the necessities of business, a willing and hearty response will be appreciated.

32. If an employee desires to buy anything from stock, he must buy it of the manager; in no case to take anything without doing so.

33. In purchasing for individual use around town, under no circumstances to use the name of the company as a means to buy cheaper.

34. Employees pay for whatever they damage; they are placed on their honor to report and pay for it.

35. Employees using bicycles will keep them in the cellar or in the back yard; they must not be left where they will cause inconvenience.

36. Conversation with the bookkeeper, or the cashier, except onbusiness, interferes materially with the work. Do not forget this.

37. Clerks, when on jury duty, have the privilege of turning in their fees, or having the time absent deducted from their wages Drawing a salary for their services, the company is entitled to their time or its equivalent.

38. Watch the ends of stock, make as few as possible, and always work them off first, to keep the stock clean.

39. Keep mum about your business. Always have a good word to say for it, and never say it is dull. Keep your eyes and ears open about your competitors.

40. One hour is allowed employees for meals.

41. Read the paper devoted to your particular line of business. Even if it is badly edited the advertisements will well repay a careful perusal.

IT WILL PAY YOU TO LEARN THE FOLLOWING BY HEART.

Towards customers be more than reasonably obliging; be invariably polite and attentive, whether they be courteous or exacting, without any regard to their looks or condition; unless, indeed, you be more obliging and serviceable to the humble and ignorant.

The more self-forgetting you are, and the more acceptable you are to whomsoever your customer may be, the better you are as a salesman. It is your highest duty to be acceptable to all.

Cultivate the habit of doing everything rapidly; do thoroughly what you undertake, and do not undertake more than you can do well.

Serve buyers in their turn. If you can serve two at once very well, but do not let the first one wait for the second.

In your first minute with a customer you give him an impression, not of yourself, but of the house, which is likely to determine, not whether he buys of you but whether he becomes a buyer of the house or a talker against.

If you are indifferent, he will detect it before you sell him, and his impression is made before you have uttered a word. At the outset you have to guess what grade of goods he wants, high priced or low priced. If you do not guess correctly, be quick to discover your error, and right yourself instantly ; it is impertinent to insist upon showing goods not wanted. It is delicately polite to get what is wanted adroitly on the slightest hint.

Do not try to change a buyer's choice, except to this extent : Always use your knowledge of goods to his advantage, if he wavers or indicates a desire for your advice. The worst blunder that you can make is to indicate in a supercilious manner that we keep better goods than he asks for.

Show goods freely to all customers ; be as serviceable as you can to all, whether buyers or not.

Sell nothing on an understanding ; make no promises that you have any doubt as to fulfilment of, and having made a promise, do more than your share toward its fulfilment, and see that the next after you does his share, if you can.

Never run down your competitors to customers. By so doing you advertise them. It won't pay you to get trade in that way. Competitors can talk back.

To sum up and put this whole matter in a few words : Attend strictly to business when on duty ; be invariably polite and obliging to every one, not only for the benefit of the company, but for your own good. Remember that civility, while it may be one of the scarcest articles in the market, is also one of the cheapest, and the net profit on it to you, in the end, will be greater—not only from a social and moral point of view, but in dollars and cents—than on anything else you may have to offer a customer.

Mr. John R. Scott, of Napanee, Ont., has recently sold 85 cases of eggs to a Boston, Mass., firm, realizing a handsome profit. His profit was greater than on any other sale he has made this year, and equal to that made at any time last year, considering the ordinary fluctuation of the market.

Mr. Joseph Carman, for some years a produce merchant in Winnipeg, has sold out to Messrs. Robertson, Thompson & Co., commission merchants, and has taken the position of city agent of the Confederation Life association, lately held by Mr. J. B. Somerset.

Mr. R. B. Anderson, Moncton, N.B., made the first shipment of lobsters this season. On Monday, the 22nd ult., he forwarded a car to Boston to Messrs. Hatheway & Co., whose representative, Mr. Price, is buying a few lots. The largest lobsters appear to strike in about Bathurst and Richibucto.

A meeting of the Dundas Retail Grocers' Association was held recently, and the following officers elected: President, Wm. Graham; 1st Vice-President, J. Kerwin; 2nd Vice-President, H. Boyle; Sec.-Treas., H. F. Powell. The association is now organized, and has formed itself into a lookout committee to spot all dead beats.

Lobsters are said to be in abundance and of much larger size than they have been for many years. Fourteen factories are running in full blast from Cape Bald to Shediac. Six of these are located on Cape Bald shore. They are owned respectively by Messrs. Kimball, J. Arsenault, C. Cormier,—Legere, P. Burke and D. Noiles. Tedish counts four factories: Messrs. Harshman, A. & D. Landry, Gasp, LeBlanc and Goulds'. Messrs. O. LeBlanc and H. Robichaud are packing at Aboujagane, and on the shore of Barachois are located Messrs. Gallant & Co., and J. Robichaud & Co.

Corp. Paddy Doyle, of the N. W. M. P., made a very clever "find" at Moosejaw a few days ago. While searching a car, which was sidetracked there for the purpose of unloading some freight, he noticed a number of barrels labelled "sugar" and two barrels with the usual permit label. Of course Paddy at once proceeded to investigate the matter, and he found that there was a permit to cover the two barrels which bore the permit label. In order to be sure that the sugar barrels contained nothing but what the label indicated, he broke open one barrel and found that it did contain sugar, but on further examination he discovered that it also contained a two-gallon-and-a-half keg of whiskey. Out of the barrels which were supposed to contain sugar, Paddy took 36 bottles of Irish whiskey, 2 two-and-a-half-gallon kegs of whiskey, 1 two-gallon keg of alcohol, and 40 gallons of Labatt's ale. White sugar, Irish whiskey, alcohol and ale is certainly a good mixture. The goods were consigned to Mr. Beaupre, of Gleichen.—Winnipeg Free Press and Sun.

THE COMMERCIAL VALUE OF A SMILE.

The title of this article may suggest—but it has no reference to—the "liquid smile," which too often is the prelude to commercial transactions. What is meant is the value of a cordial manner and friendly smiling greeting when extended by the salesman towards his customers. So important a factor is it, that were I in doubt about the selection of a clerk, I should unhesitatingly give the preference to him of the ready smile and happy countenance, even in the absence of other qualities of perhaps a deeper origin. Everybody likes sunshine, and when nature smiles we all feel a thrill of pleasure, and a sense of newer life; so when we grasp the extended hand and look into the smiling face of a fellow-creature we involuntarily relax the features and respond to the friendly greeting. How many times do we go considerably out of our way to trade with a proprietor or clerk whose pleasant manner has left an impression upon our feelings. How often do we reserve our orders for the smiling "Drummer," and are "completely stocked" for his opposite competitor.

But a smiling face to be of permanent value must have its source beneath the surface; it must be spontaneous and the spokesman for the heart. A smile which is not engendered by genial good feeling and friendly intent is, however well feigned, soon detected and its user dealt with, with more than usual caution. If you are unable to smile honestly and sincerely, don't try; rely upon your other abilities to effect a sale. There are some people who could honestly earn a respectable salary, by simply standing near the entrance to a store and greeting the customers as they entered.

It is so much easier to suit a customer if we first secure his good will and confidence, that the value of a friendly smile is to be found extended over many years, and is a magnet which draws even against the powerful opposition of prices and variety. Perhaps this is best evidenced by the willingness with which the public will shut their eyes to the minor defects of an article when presented by a salesman who smiles as he deplores its defects and extols its merits. Personal magnetism itself depends for its very existence upon a smiling face and cordial manner, and the possessor of such a countenance will rise above his fellow clerks and become indispensable to his employer in spite of the fact that he may not be as well posted in the details of the business.

But the smile to be of commercial value must be backed by tact and judgement. It must be a smile which has a "think" behind it, and while its owner is looking out for the interest of his customer he must not forget the welfare of his employer or his business. Suppose two young men start out in life with equal business training and years. Say that John Morose has more capital than his companion, Frank Cordial, and that they both open stores in the same city; John having the larger capital will be able to keep the greater variety, while Frank will be restricted to closer lines. Customers are attracted by John's display of goods and naturally visit his store first. They like his goods, his prices and his arrangements, but his manner is chilling and distant, and while they feel that he is honest and capable they never become well acquainted or feel at ease.

Frank, his companion, comes in for a share of his trade, and when John's customers casually walk into his store he greets them friendly and smiles when he is unable to supply their wants from his meagre stock. He gets them interested is his venture and enlists their sympathy for his success. He learns and remembers their names, and the faces of their children; he talks about the subjects which most interest them, and shows a friendly feeling for their welfare and comfort. Customers have a way of coming in and talking over their affairs with Frank, and if the goods they want are not in stock will wait for him to get them, although they know that John has them on hand and they could secure them there at once. People when they pass Frank's store have a habit of looking in to catch his friendly nod and smile, and his trade grows steadily and surely.

John, on the other hand, finds that his first customers, although suited in quality and price, rarely return and seem anxious to get outside as quickly as possible into the sunlight. He fails to see the fault—so hard it is to see ourselves as others see us—and increases his stock and reduces his prices, but in spite of capital and good business training, he is unable to hold his customers. His imitative clerks become like himself, and even his surroundings and store fixtures take on a sombre hue in keeping with their owner. The promising start turns out a failure—or what is perhaps worse, a mere drag of worrying existence—and John Morose joins the many who deem life itself a failure.

Now, if, when this imaginary John first commenced to battle with life, some experienced friend had deeply impressed upon his mind the great value of a smiling face as a factor of business success, he might easily have made a marked career and enjoyed life, rather than endured existence. Or if, from natural constitution, he found it difficult or impossible to be cordial, he might have realized its great importance and secured the services of clerks who had these traits in a large degree and kept himself in the background. There are few establishments but depend for their prosperity upon the cordial manner of some employee, who holds the trade by his smile and friendly bearing towards his patrons.

Right here, it would seem, is provided a chance for any young man of average ability and common sense, to render himself indispensable to his employer and a possibly future partner by the exercise and cultivation of a cordial manner and sincere smile.—Ex.

GROCERIES.

Yesterday being Dominion Day, the volume of the week's business was confined within six days. These were crowded from first to last with stir at all the wholesale warehouses. Since Monday particularly have things been lively. But the trade done has been very one-sided Almost the sole object of inquiry has been sugar, and until Monday last there was little of it to be had. Every other line is neglected in the zeal of the people and of traders to get a hold of cheap sugar. No notable lack of money is felt as payments are made generally on time. A generally better feeling pervades the country, crops promising well in most products of the soil. The cheapening of sugar has had quite a buoyant effect upon the spirits of trade.

CANNED GOODS.

The future canned goods market is the coming event whose shadow dealers are just now trying to discern. Inquiries are beginning to be heard from retailers, but not sufficient interest is yet aroused to be a trustworthy medium on which to launch absolute quotations. Jobbers are not ardent bidders and packers show no disposition to do much business. It looks as if both sides were willing to see a rational basis under the market before they do much. Canned salmon, which had a temporary bad spell last week, owing to cutting on a particular brand, is now in a steady position again, $1.40 being firm for good brands. There are no canned apples now. Tomatoes are $1.55 to $1.60, or 5 to 10c. higher than they were a week ago. They are now exceedingly scarce. French peas are dearer in the primary market, the crop being reported short, the finest being almost one-third fewer than they were last year.

The Vancouver World of the 18th June says: So far this season from all reports the catch of salmon in the Fraser has been very light, and the cannery men are beginning to think the season will not be so good a one as was at first anticipated. So far as can be learned very few of the canneries are yet running full time, two or three days each week being quite sufficient to pack all the fish caught. The quality of fish, say the canners, is exceptionally good, and it is hoped the season's pack will restore again the confidence of the English buyers in British Columbia goods. On all sides the greatest care is being used in selection and packing, while every appliance that will assist the grade is being used. Several of the canneries have received new labels from the east and will change their brands.

COFFEE.

Some unsettlement at the great distributing points keeps the position of coffee rather problematical, as the real strength of the new crop is variously represented. Just at the moment the market in New York favors holders. Here there is no change, and there is very little business.

DRIED FRUIT.

What there is doing on this market counts for little just now, the demand for sugar crowding out every other demand. This rather aggravates than checks the weakness of Valencia raisins which can be had yet from 4c. upwards, though good stock may be said to be somewhat firmer than it was at 5 to 5½c. Currants are steady and unchanged. Prunes continue weak on account of the break in the New York market, where also almonds and figs are easier. There is no change in prices of any dried fruit.

NUTS.

In addition to this fact that the demand from the trade is rather fitful, this week the demand is so strongly pre-occupied with sugar that little is done at all in nuts. Some changes in quotations are to be noted. Tarragona almonds are down to 15 and 16c. There are no shelled almonds.

RICE AND SPICES.

Like most lines they are rather quiet. Rice has been quite active up to this week and is scarce. Once the run on sugar becomes steady rice will be in strong demand at firm prices. There is little to say about spices.

SUGAR.

The force-pumps of the demand have been at work since the 24th, but the supply was not got flowing freely before Monday morning, when a perfect congestion of orders made every warehouse a veritable beehive of activity. If there was a big demand for other goods it had to be laid aside as the sugar business taxed the time and activity of every staff to its utmost. On Sunday sugar was forwarded by special freight from the refineries. Thus a business day was gained, and was needed to overtake the rush of orders. Since Monday the demand has been pretty well met, but the amount of sugar put out this week is an unusually large one for the last of June and early part of July. The excitement, however, is kept up steadily. Nobody can wait for any abatement of the demand to make prices easier, as there is an imperative and instant need of sugar. No one has time to wait for the Guild's ruling as to what shall be done with the provisional agreement as to the discount on 10 barrel lots. Dealers are buying in large orders very generally. Not only the ripening fruit but the mere fact that sugar is lower has given a great stimulus to buying. The price of raw will more directly rule the situation here now, and that is reported firm, so that present quotations for refined have a tendency to go up. This tendency is further developed by the demand here. Granulated in 15 barrel and larger lots is 4⅞c., and in smaller quantities 5c. The lowest grade of yellow is 3⅞c. to 4c., while medium is 4 to 4⅛c. Other changes are noted in Prices Current. There were some houses selling yellow as low as 3½c., but the contracts for these sales were made upon a purely theoretic calculation and before the refiners quoted on yellows. They are now filling their orders with soft sugar that cost them 3⅞c.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

There has been little demand and little time for attention on the part of the wholesale trade to the demand heard from. Molasses is firm, as supplies at primary sources are and will be unusually short. Syrups have gone down ⅜ to ½c. because of the taking off of the duty on sugar.

TEAS.

There has been a steady movement of orders, but little shipping of stock, owing to the monopoly of attention required by sugar. The demand for new Japans continues active, and stock as low as 20c. is quite in favor. The scarcity of Young Hysons continues to be a leading want. Little or no attention has been paid to Indian teas this week, sugar appearing to have engrossed the interest of the trade to the exclusion of other staples. The following table shows the separate quantities of Indian, Ceylon and China Tea re-exported from Great Britain during the season just closed. This is the first season in which separate figures for Indian and Ceylon exports were obtainable. Although the amounts re-shipped from this Country are small when compared with China, the quantities are substantial, and signs are not wanting that a large increase may take place in the near future. During the season the Australian Colonies took direct from India just under 5 million lbs., against 3½ million in the previous season, while over 2½ million pounds were also shipped direct from Ceylon during the year 1890. When it is remembered that the American and other markets have also been using British grown Tea, it becomes clear that the total amount of India and Ceylon Tea used in foreign markets is already an appreciable proportion of the entire crops.

Exports of Tea from Great Britan during the season 1890-91.—Indian: 2,327,409. Ceylon: 1,426,094; China, etc.: 29,366,488.

In London auctions have again been very light, and while comprising many New Season's invoices have also contained a large number of old Calcutta purchases. These latter have not met with much attention and lower quotations resulted where sales were forced, many parcels being withdrawn for higher prices.

PETROLEUM.

Not much can be said of the petroleum trade that might not be said in any midsummer week, when long daylight makes trade dull. It is dull now but prices are steady.

The Petrolia Advertiser reports: Petrolia crude $1.36½ per bbl, Oil Springs crude $1.37 per bbl. The above prices now rule, and will, in all probability, continue to rule during the next few weeks, unless some large strikes are secured. During the heated term the oil business generally remains quiet, it being the dull season of the trade, but the drill will continue all the same, and new developments that will increase the production made. Refined is 12½ to 13 cents in car lots, with a strong upward tendency being noticeable as the season advances A very large and active business is being anticipated this fall, by all engaged in it.

DRUGS AND CHEMICALS.

There is nothing new in the drug trade, which continues active in summer lines. Prices also keep stationary. In general staples, things are rather quiet.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

The quality of the butter made at this time of year makes the demand a good one, while the quantity of it marketed very fairly balances the demand. Prices are somewhat higher, a result of hot weather and less luxuriant pasture. Creamery butter is consequently having a slightly better chance, though not yet do dairy prices get near those asked by creamery men, which are 22 to 23c. for rolls and 20 to 21c. for tubs. Creamery is offering more freely than it is been sought. Choice dairy tubs are 14½ to 15c., medium tubs are 12½ to 13c., and what is classed low grade is 10 to 11c.,and hard to get for cooking and baking purposes Rolls are not coming in except in street receipts of pound prints at 15 to 17c. Large rolls are not being marketed on account of the heat. Crocks and pails are reasonably plentiful.

Cheese is easy and selling quietly at 10 to 11c.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

BEANS—have still a place in the market though not a large one, as the demand has got as limited as the supply. They quote $1.50 to $1.80.

DRIED APPLES—are quiet, rather scarce and steady at 7¾ to 8½c.

EVAPORATED APPLES—are in need of a better demand. The stock is not large but there is little inquiry. Price 12 to 13½c.

EGGS—Receips are mostly in small lots. Strictly fresh sell readily at 12½.

HAY—Is firm at $10.50 to 11.50 for timothy. These prices bring a fair supply to market. There is more than usual at this season in the country, because of the easy prices that prevailed through the winter. This is expected to make the situation less stringent than was expected on account of short crops.

HIDES—Are steady at 5c. for No. 1 green, and 6¼c. for buffs.

HONEY—Is quiet at 7 to 10c. for strained, and 14 to 16c. for sections, with these prices weaker than ever.

HOPS—Preserve their tone at 35 to 38c. More interest is developing in the market as buyers are just now considering whether to depend for supplies on the new crop or to buy now. There is a very strong likelihood that the former will be the wiser course, as prices do not usually open as high as they are now.

OATS—Are weak at 50 to 51c.

ONIONS—Are quiet, and range from $2 to $2.25.

POTATOES—Have relaxed under the effect of larger supplies and receipts of new crop stock from the United States. On track old potates are down to $1.10 and $1.15. Fifty bag lots exchanged hands at $1. Full cars are the exception, broken lots is the rule. Out of store lots are $1.25 to $1.50.

SKINS—Pelts and lambskins are 20 and 30c. respectively. Calfskins are 6 to 8c.

STRAW—Is quiet at $6 to $8 for oat.

WOOL—Is very dull at 18 to 19c. for fleeces.

FISH.

No awakening of the demand is quite due for above a month. Pedlars are the leading distributors yet to consumers, and stock is precarious in such hot weather yet. Prices are unchanged at last week's quotations.

THE SOAP AGE.

THERE has been great progress made in the manufacture of laundry soap the last few years ; so much so that the old-fashioned way of merely combining grease and lye is done. Soap is now made and combined on scientific principles from first to last and is an immense improvement over the common yellow soap so long in use. So manifest is this improvement that now many people are demanding better made soap which give better results. The grocer recognizes this fact and looks for the best kinds for his customers.

To fill this demand "Surprise Soap" is made. It has been some seven years on the market and has met with such success and has so satisfied the people that it can now be obtained over nearly all of Canada. Surprise fills the want of a soap combining cheapness with excellence. Write for further information

GREEN FRUIT.

Green fruit is in active demand. Oranges were getting into small compass, the stock being limited almost to Messinas up to this week. A very few cases of Valencias are to be had at $7 to $7.50. Messinas are $4 to $4.50. There are now some fancy Mediterranean sweets (Duarte) at $5 in 150-boxes and $5.50 in 176-boxes. They come in on Tuesday. Rodis have been received this week. They sell at $6.50. Messina and Palermo lemons quote alike now, only fancy stock of each kind being in, all rubbish having got off the market through pedlars, etc. The price is now $6. The only kind of pineapples here now is the sugar-loaf, selling at $1.75 for extra and $2.25 for finest. Bananas are $1.50 for seconds and $2 for firsts. All yellows. Demand quiet for them and pines because of the coming in of small fruit. The California fruits now arriving are apricots, $2.75, peaches, $2 to $2.25, plums, $4, Bartlett pears, $7. Tomatoes are $2.25. Strawberries are 6 to 9c., the former for inferior fruit. The price is firmer since the opening of the sugar-market.

PROVISIONS.

Smoked meats are in steady demand as well as is long clear bacon. Prices are steady and unchanged.

BACON—Long clear is 7¾ to 8¼c., bellies are 10 to 10½c., rolls are 8 to 9c., backs are 10c.

HAMS—Are firm at 11c. for large and 11½c. for moderate sizes of smoked. Sweet pickled are 10 to 10¼c.

LARD—Is steady at 9½ to 10c.

MESS PORK—Is steady at $15.50 to $16 for heavy and $17 for short cut.

SALT.

Job lot prices remain the same as last week, with trade fairly good. In car lots prices are unsettled as buyers are holding off. Sales this week : 1 car sacks 70c., 1 car dairy $1.25.

DRY GOODS.

Trade is quiet, but the situation is more satisfactory than it was. The week's business has been shorter because of the holiday on Wednesday. Prices are steady and unchanged.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, July 2 1891.

The week has seen an important alteration in the ruling conditions of the grocery market, namely, the abolition of the sugar duties and naturally as everyone expected trade has benefitted by it. The movement has already commenced, but owing to the delay in releasing the refineries it has not assumed large magnitude yet, but it is daily doing so. Naturally other lines benefit as well as sugar, for it is a leading line and with the better order for sugar jobbers report quite a nice crop for other lines as well in an incidental kind of a way. Briefly the market has assumed a more active one, and had it not been for the two holidays intervening, quite a nice little business would have been done all round.

SUGAR.

Although the inventory by the custom house officers has delayed matters somewhat, the effect of the abolition of the duty on raw is distinctly apparent. All the houses are being rushed with orders and the move will last for a considerable period as stocks in third hands are reported to be down to almost nothing. With the altered conditions has come a sensible drop in price, and this with the natural condition mentioned above has called up a really brisk demand. From refineries granulates are now moving freely at 4½c. and yellows at 3¾c. and it is to be inferred that the jobbers are moving forward their orders with proportinate celerity for they are repeating already.

MOLASSES.

There has been a steady, quiet distributive demand for molasses, and since our last, a couple of cargoes have been turned over at 40c. Recent cables from the islands quote this identical figure as the first cost. The new tariff will have little effect here, as very little stock under the 40 list is imported at this port.

COFFEE.

With the activity in sugar, improvement in other lines is apparent, and coffee has been one of these, several good sized lots of Rios and Javas being moved during the week at 20½ and 25 to 26c. respectively.

RICE.

There is a fair distributive trade in progress and prices are unchanged. We quote: Patna, $4.50 to $5; choice, $4.25 to $4.50; standard, $3.90, and off grades, $3.50 in car lots.

CANNED GOODS.

There has been a better demand for corn and tomatoes during the past few days, and stocks have been pretty well sifted. New salmon are selling slowly, but prices are firm. Canned meats are firm.

FRUIT.

Dried fruits have been fairly active during the week as values are low, which has induced more business. Raisins sell at 4 to 4 1-4c. with 4 1-2c. for finest stock, and currents 5 3-4 to 6c. Green fruit furnish a seasonable business. Oranges are steady at $3 to $4.50 per box and lemons $5 to $5.50.

HOPS.

Brewers are not taking anything now, in fact there is little stock at hand here, and what is in the country is held somewhat firmer in consequence of unfavorable crop reports. Spot values are purely nominal, in fact it would be misleadlng to quote any figure in the absence of an actual sale.

PROVISIONS.

The provision market is unchanged and there is a fair jobbing trade doing. We quote:—Canadian short cut, per barrel, $16.50 to $17.00; mess pork, western, per barrel $15.50 to $16.00; short cut, western, per brl $16.50 to $17.00; hams, city cured, per pound 10 to 11c.; hams, canvassed, per lb 0 00 to 0 00c.; lard, Canadian, in pails, 9 to 9¼c.; bacon, per pound, 9 to 10c.; lard, com., refined, per lb, 8 to 8¼c.

EGGS.

The egg market has stiffened up considerably since our last report. In fact an advance of 1c. has been established, and we now quote values steady at 12 to 12½c. under light receipts and a good demand.

BUTTER.

The market has not shown any change yet, but there is an impression abroad that present prices are not to dear, so that there may be a move in a speculative way ere long. Actually, though there is nothing but a quiet jobbing trade doing at unchanged values. We quote creamery 18 to 19c.; townships 16 to 17c., and western 14 to 15c.

British Markets.

Having closed out our local business, we are now prepared to give special attention to all lines of

CHEESE.

Although the Britishers still argue for lower values, the market on this side has stiffened pretty sharply during the past week. This bulge in values is solely due to heavy buying by a few of the large shippers who consider values good, and we incline to the opinion that they are about right. The make is smaller, shipments less, the country well sold up, so that all the conditions point to the imbrobability of 40s. June cheese this season. We quote the basis here firm at 8 3-4 to 9c., below which it would be impossible to touch any finest.

GRAIN.

There is no change in the grain market all kinds being quite. The stocks in store compared with those of a week ago, show a decrease of 93,177 bushels of wheat, 19,459 bushels of corn, 38,500 bushels of peas, and an increase of 670 bushels of oats, 795 bushels of barley. Compared with the corresponding week last year there is an increase of 313,484 bushels of wheat, 47,975 bushels of oats, and a decrease of 159.577 bushels of corn, 117,337 bushels of peas and 5,381 bushels of barley. We quote: No. 1 hard Manitoba, $0; No. 2 hard Manitoba, $1.12; to $1.14 No. 3 do., 99c; No. 2 Northern, $1.01 to $1.03; feed do., 60c. to 62c.; peas, 85c. per 66 pounds in store; 87c. afloat; Manitoba oats, 55c. Upper Canada do., 54c. to 56c. per 34 pounds; corn, 72c. to 75c. duty paid; feed barley, 61 to 62c; good malting do., 65c. to 67c; rye, 83c. to 84c.

FLOUR.

The flour market is dull and easy and the decline in prices does not appear to induce any demand. The fact is buyers as a general thing are pretty well supplied for some time ahead at least. The stock in store shows an increase of 4,567 barrels compared with a week ago, and a decrease of 3,483 bbls. compared with a year ago. We quote:—Patent spring, $5.75; patent winter, $5.30; straight roller, $5.00 to $5.15; extra, $4.50 to $4.80; superfine, $4.00 to $4.30; city strong bakers', $5.50; strong bakers', $5.25.

HALIFAX MARKET QUOTATIONS.

(Wholesale Selling Rates.)

HALIFAX, July 2, 1891.

Since last writing there has been but little change in the local flour market, and until trade improves none is probable.

Manitoba highest grade patents, $6.25 to 6.35; High grade patents, $6.10 to 6.15; Good 90 per cent Patents, $5.60 to 5.75; Straight grade, $5.20 to 5.50; Superior extras, $5.30 to 5.40; Good seconds, $5.05 to 5.20; Graham flour, $5.25 to 5.50; Oatmeal, $6; Oatmeal rolled, $6.10; Kiln dried cornmeal, $3 to 3.60; Rolled wheat, $5.50; Wheat bran per ton, $19 to 20; Shorts per ton $26 to 27; Middlings $27.50 to 28.50; Cracked corn, including bags, $42; Split peas, $4; White beans per bushel, $1.80 to 2; Pot barley per barrel, $3.90 to 4.10; Canadian oats, choice quality, 63c. to 65c.; Hay per ton, $11.75 to 13.

SUGARS.—Very little has been doing, buyers merely taking enough for present wants. Since change in tariff was announced orders have come in very freely, but as the refineries are in the hands of the customs officials no deliveries can be made yet. Cut loaf, 5c.; Granulated, 4¼c.; Circle A, 4½c.; White extra C, 4¼c.; Standard, 3¾c.; Extra yellow C, 3½c.; Yellow C, 3¼c.

MOLASSES.—The market is very strong. Reports from West Indies show that shortage is everywhere. It is now stated that the crop will not exceed 27,000 puncheons as compared with 5,000 from Barbadoes last year. As there are small stocks of old in Canada it is probable prices will be kept up 10 cents higher than they were last year at this time. If business brightens up it is probable prices will be put up higher still. Barbados, 40c.; Demerara, 35 to 38c.; Diamond N. 48c.; Porto Rico, 37 to 38c.; Trinidad, 34 to 35c.; Antigua, 34 to 35.

FISH—The wholesale trade is very quiet. Mackerel are being stopped along the shore in small quantities but none of very great importance. We append quotations on various lines. No. 3 large reamed mackerels $10 to $11; No. 3 reamed, $11; No. 3 large plain, $9.50 to $11; No. 3 plain, $9; small codfish, hard C. B. $5 to $5.50; western shore, $4.75 to $5; bank, $5 to $5.25.

ST. JOHN, N.B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N.B., June 30, 1891.

GROCERIES.

A steady demand has been maintained the past week for all lines, and especially larger in sugar. We now look for an improvement, as the uncertainty about the duties had a bad effect on business.

SUGAR—The amount moved since the settlement of the duties has been enormous, as every dealer was on short allowance. The price now is 3⅝ to 4c. for yellows and 4½ to 4¾c. for granulated.

MOLASSES—There is no demand for molasses this week every one is using sugar, Barbadoes is quoted, 38 to 40 with very little held.

FLOUR—Remains dull, very little demand, and slightly lower prices $5.65 to $5.70 for Ontario High grade Manitoba $6.25 to $6.30.

MEAL—Cornmeal is holding steady, with very little demand, and prices are as last quoted, $3.45 to $3.50.

Open to receive an agency for a British House not now represented here, give references.

Address, J. B., care this paper.

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER, issued weekly, subscription price $2.00 per year.

ST. JOHN'S MARKETS—Continued.

OATMEAL—There has been very little change since last week, is quoted a little lower.

FEED—Is higher and selling for $28 per ton.

HAY—$12 per ton.

OATS—Are selling at 58 to 60c. per bushel.

FISH—Codfish are in good demand and are selling at $4.40 to $4.50 for large, $4.10 to $4.25 for medium. Pollock are worth $2.00 to $2.10. There have been very few vessels arrived lately as the winds have been very heavy and consequently a light catch. Fresh salmon sell readily at 13 to 14c. per 100 lbs.

Butter is coming in quite freely selling at 16 to 20c. per lb.

Dried apples are very scarce and can hardly be bought at any price. Evaporated 14½ to 15c.

THE TOBACCO DUTIES.

The price of tobacco is advanced 5c. a pound in consequence of the duty, both customs and excise, having been increased 5c. a pound. Some of this increase, perhaps the whole of it, will come off the retail trade, among whom the tendency has been to sell at the lowest prices they can get down to. Twelves will no doubt continue to retail at 5c. each, but by the pound there will have to be an advance, as now they will cost more than they formerly sold for, the present cost being 51c., while the former retail price was very generally 50c. Sevens will amply pay yet at 10c. each, but will barely pay at 3 for 25c. In the case of twelves, the size of the plug may be altered so as to give 13 or some other number to the pound, and thus compensate the retailer for the reduction that the tariff makes in his profits. The manufacturers should devise some means to prevent the whole burden of $400,000 from being saddled on the trade. They need assume none of it and yet greatly lighten it for retailers of tobacco. A change was made in the sizes in 1872 or thereabouts. The consumption of tobacco will probably be very slightly affected by the higher duty. An advance from 12 to 20c. was made after the North West rebellion, but instead of a diminished we have had an increased consumption every year since.

There appears to be some doubt as to whether the duty on Canada leaf has been increased or not. The Minister of Finance is reported to have said that Canada leaf is not included in the tobacco on which the duty has been increased. If that is the case, it will have to bear a duty of 5c., against a duty of 25c. imposed on tobacco manufactured from foreign leaf.

PATRONS OF INDUSTRY.

The local newspapers of Michigan teem with announcements similar to the following :—

"Morseville Lodge P. of I. disbanded Saturday night, and sold everything belonging to the order.

* * * *

"The Patrons of Industry in this town are very nearly broke up. At a recent meeting a committee was appointed to settle with the finance keeper, and they found $3 in cash on hand, which was paid out for some necessaries, which leaves the finance keeper very short."

The Michigan Tradesman says it is assured by an authority which it deems thoroughly reliable, that less than one-tenth of the organizations inaugurated under the auspices of the P. of I. are now in existence, and that only one lodge in thirty-five is now paying per capita dues to the State organization. The approaching extinction of the order suggests the lament of the poet :

If so soon I am done for,
What was I begun for?

—American Grocer.

Mr. Gillespie, a well-known commercial traveller, was married on the 24th ult. at Winnipeg to Miss Scoble, daughter of Col. Scoble.

Mr. John Jackson, formerly grocer in Brockville, died last week in Guatemala, Central America. He was 35 years old and a short time before his death he sent word to his mother in Brockville that he would come home to spend the summer.

Canadan tea drinkers will take comfort from the investigation of the Inland Revenue Department, which shows that, while the astringent properties of certain brands of green teas are rather high, the degree of adulteration is not significant. On the whole the teas sold in Canada are of a very fair quality. An analysis is also being made of sugars, molasses and syrups. So far as the examination has gone there does not appear to be much adulteration in the sugar, but the samples of molasses evidently contain a large quantity of deleterious substances.

Nothing angers a man or woman more than the promise to have goods delivered to them at a certain time and no goods appear. Every merchant should by all means see that goods are delivered when promised. Many are so anxious to trade that they will promise a customer anything when they know at the time they cannot fulfill it. This scheme may work once or twice, but it does not pay to continue it. We recognize the fact that many patrons are unreasonable in their demands, but a merchant should learn to say no in a way that will not offend.—Commercial Tribune, Denver.

Half a dozen Western states supply the bulk of all the eggs which are consumed in New York city. Indiana sends the largest number. Next on the list are Ohio, Michigan and Iowa. It is estimated that Indiana is the largest egg-producing state in the country. Illinois hens produce many eggs, but they nearly all go to the Chicago market. Heretofore Canada has shipped into the United States hundreds of carloads of eggs. For the last three or four years Canada has annually shipped about $2,000,000 worth of eggs to this market. The present duty on foreign eggs promises a practical prohibition against imports. Previous to the change in tariff considerable importations of eggs were made from Europe commencing three or four years ago. These European eggs were gathered principally in Southern Germany and Italy, and preserved. The dealers say that pickled eggs, while not good for poaching or boiling because the shells are brittle, yet are useful for many other purposes.—Northeast Grocer.

SELLING COAL IN NEWCASTLE.

The steamer Premier brought in a cargo of Vancouver sugar yesterday. It may not be generally known that there is such an institution as a sugar refinery on the northern coast, yet such is the fact, and it promises to make it warm for the San Francisco members of the sugar trust. Frank T. Way, the Seattle representative of the Vancouver enterprise, says that this new refinery is now turning out about 300 barrels per day, about one-sixth of which is consumed in Vancouver and Victoria, the balance finding a market in the Sound cities. He claims that the prices are much lower than those of San Francisco, but that many of the jobbers are bound by contracts to buy from the trust, having entered into those contracts to prevent the trust from selling to large retailers. But the latter now buy from the Vancouver refinery, leaving the jobbers in the lurch. This, he claims, has aroused the jobbers so that they have sent a committee to San Francisco to secure a reduction in prices. He says the first car load from Vancouver reached Seattle on May 29th, and notice was given Spreckels, who represents the trust, that he must cut prices, but he failed to comply. The committee then went south, and is expected back in a few days. Nothing has been learned as yet regarding the reception given to the committee. Mr. Way says there is no probability that this new refinery will be swallowed up by the trust, as it has heavy backing and has been established as a permanent business.— Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

THE STIMULUS OF DEBT.

If a young man has a good head on him it is not only safe, but advisable, to assume financial obligation where a way can be seen through it by preservance and economy, says the New York Tribune. A fool can do nothing either in debt or out. Debt is a stimulus to exertion. The hammer of the mechanic who has purchased his house on part credit is heard to resound earlier in the morning and later in the evening. He expends less money on frivolities, because "that mortgage must be met." The merchant in debt takes better care of his stock in trade, buyes closer, and is more agreeable to customers. The farmer goes to town less; makes fewer purchases not absolutely needed. Debt is a wonderful stimulus to thrift. There are few farmers who did not go in debt for their farms. It enabled them to secure a home at once, and instilled into them good habits to pay for it. It is wise for a young couple without means to purchase a modest home and then go to work and pay for it. They will thus acquire habits of economy. Most capable business men have at some time in their lives been seriously in debt. Nine-tenths of the business in the country has been built by judiciously borrowing capital to do it with.

The trader who pays his way must sell at a profit, and cannot afford to cut below others in the same line.

Credit is often too cheap and overbubing far too common. Don't be guilty of the one, and don't abuse the other.

THE PROBLEM OF BUSINESS.

To sell one's product is the hill of difficulty which confronts every man.

It matters not what that product may be. With the manufacturer it is the article he makes—furniture, pianos, china, lamps, and bric-a-brac ; boats, machinery, personal apparel, food products, soaps, cosmetics and a thousand-and-one other things of necessity, luxury and pleasure ; with the merchant it is goods, wares and merchandise ; with the lawyer and doctor it is advice ; with the schoolmaster experience and knowledge on tap, as it were, and with the editor, clergyman and author it is ability, perceptions, ideas, brains ; while with the artisan it is the art of knowing how, and with the laborer, labor. These are their products or stock in trade, and life is simply a struggle to sell the same—to exchange for salaries and profits, to convert into solid cash.

To let the people know what you have to sell is advertising. Every man is advertising when he solicits trade or seeks a position. He offers you what he has—his products or his goods—and urges you to buy.

The secret of successful advertising is to so favorably impress the customer that he will come to you. If you were alone in the field this would not be so difficult ; your wares would advertise themselves in a measure. But you have thousands of wily competitors. Your products—what you have to sell—may be superior to the stock in trade of many of your rivals ; but they have advertised, and they and theirs have the reputation, and they prosper while you languish.

Moreover, an article of high reputation commands a greater price. So, also, the lawyer, artisan, editor, or doctor who has a reputation for distinguished ability in his profession, commands a higher price for his services. Reputation is simply the good opinion which comes from advertising. The more advertising the greater the reputation, and the more the reputation the greater the demand.

Reputation to the lawyer or doctor comes slowly; it is a growth of years. Why? The narrow custom of the profession forbids the open use of the paid columns of the newspaper, and they rely on other methods. That which they take a quarter of a century to accomplish—to obtain notoriety, a reputation—a baking powder manufacturer will secure by the liberal use of printers' ink in a short twelve months.

The presumption is that there is always merit; there must be, for the people are not fools. But there are a thousand articles of great merit without reputation, and they only need to be brought before the public to be in general demand.—Ex.

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

Sugar sells from retail counters these days at varying prices, but nearly everywhere without profit. The situation would seem to be the reverse of what it actually is; it would seem that the advantage were for the time on the side of the demand, whereas it is on the side of the supply. Sugar has been comparatively scarce since the duty was removed, while the demand has kept strong and active and has helped to give tone and firmness to the price of raw. In such circumstances it might be expected that a reasonable profit would be added to prices by retailers, but as a rule they have been as eager to sell as their customers have been to buy, and in their desire to outdo one another have been as self-sacrificing as in days when the price did appear to be somewhat of a hindrance to trade. The sole cause of profitless prices is simply the desire to get the bulk of the trade. It is not necessity, as the people want sugar, and the country is not overstocked with it.

The reputation which many of the trade cherish is that of being the lowest local man on sugar. That appears to be regarded as the test by which consumers try rival dealers and according to which the placing of their trade is determined. Consequently local competitors emulate each other in selling sugar cheap. It is miserably unsatisfactory, but it seems impossible to get the sugar trade on any better basis. There is a senseless cry of "combination" as soon as the proposal is made that the traders of any locality shall agree to stop cutting prices. What is there reproachful about such a cry? What does it attribute to a body of men that in such circumstances they need be ashamed of? In what respect is union to thwart customers' designs upon your profits less moral than union to prevent the contracting of bad accounts that deadbeats run up? The playing of trader against trader for the dissipation of profits is just as much conspiracy on the part of the public as the union of trader with trader to protect profits is on the part of the trade. A name or a word should frighten nobody unless it truly imputes what is discreditable. The word "combine" is taken for granted to be an epithet of reproach, but it is one, only if it implies unions of greedy men to levy exorbitant profits on the public. The sort of union whose purpose is to stay the progress of business debility is not a 'combine' in any objectionable sense.

* * * *

The grocery trade is encountered by opposition on the part of other traders in small lines that are distinctly grocery stock. Pedlars and big dry-goods houses sell tea, while pedlars and druggists sell extracts; butchers sell butter, eggs and vegetables; dry-goods houses sell soap. Sugar is a commodity that the grocery trade has the exclusive distribution of, it makes up about 40 per cent. of the entire grocery trade, the handling of it is the most expensive item of the freight and cartage account, and the time allowed on it is the shortest that grocery jobbers will consent to on any line. All these are reasons why sugar should pay a fair profit. What are the reasons that it does not? There is simply one, and that is foolish waywardness on the part of a majority of the retail trade.

* * * *

The circumstances which prevail in the sugar trade that is done now, as they are indicated above, make the business of selling it not only profitless but precarious. Add to these circumstances the facts that an unyielding wholesale price is kept up on granulated sugar, and that butter and other produce have to be recognized as cash by the country merchant, and the wonder is that the evil of selling sugar minus a profit has not worked its own cure by the number of failures it has brought about. The greater number of sales that will be made under the prices that free sugar has inaugurated will no doubt hedge in the grocery trade more closely, and either cause more thinning out or lead to the establishment of a rational basis for the retail trade in sugar.

* * * *

The more stringent terms that now obtain in the sugar trade will do good, as they will tend to have an effect similar to that of the fence which the Irishman built round a sterile tract of sand, to keep the cows out for fear they would starve upon it. If the short terms will keep newcomers out for a while, and the foregoing of profits of sugar be continued a little longer, a sifting out will take place that may be followed by reform, as the survivors will generally be men of judgment and strength who may be expected to come to an understanding among themselves to wage competition on a sound basis. They will be be brought to common consent the earlier the sooner the weak traders succumb to the effects of their own reckless price-cutting.

* * * *

The cheapness of granulated sugar will increase very greatly the consumption of it. As prices have declined during the past fifteen years, the proportion of granulated consumed has grown very greatly, while the proportion of yellow in demand has shrunken. In the United States now, yellow sugar is being neglected, and the position of it is causing considerable interest. Here, the expansion in the consumption consequent upon the removal of the duty will go almost altogether to the benefit of granulated. That means that the sugar trade will be, more than ever, one on which the market will present few inequalities for the retailer to take advantage of, by way of offsetting the close prices he sells at.

Men of the Times.

MR. JOHN McELDERY.

"Examples demonstrate the possibility of success."—COLTON.

Prominent among the successful retail merchants of Canada, stands J. E. McEldery, proprietor of the noted tea store, No. 2, Day's Block, Guelph, Ont. The question is often asked, Do retail men make money? A glance at Mr. McEldery's business career not only answers the question in the affirmative, but gives a word of encouragement, and a few pointers to young men starting out in life.

The subject of this sketch was born in Toronto in 1848. His father, Mr. E. McEldery, was a prominent dry goods merchant at that time, and afterwards filled the important position of emigrant agent for Upper Canada. Mr. McEldery moved to Guelph with his parents in '61. He was educated in the separate schools of the city, and at the age of 15 entered the employment of James Massie, now warden of the central prison, then wholesale and retail grocer in Guelph. While there the young man laid the foundation of his future business career, which has been so successful. After mastering the details of the business, at the age of 20 he went into business for himself with a capital of $300, backed up with good habits, good health, and a determination to succeed. His motto was "There is room at the top." In twenty years he has earned a competency and is yet in the prime of life. He established his credit by meeting his engagements promptly and by applying every available dollar on open accounts and notes maturing, never keeping money in the bank that he owed any man. As the name of the store would indicate, Mr. McEldery paid special attention to teas. In fact he made them his leading line, and let the consumer know it in every legitimate way. He was, and still is, noted far and near for his choice blends, and is a firm believer in a liberal and judicious use of printers' ink to let the public know what he has to sell.

He subscribes to all the first class trade journals, keeps himself well posted on every thing pertaining to his business, and is recognized as a close buyer and a first class judge of goods. The following are some of the elementsthat tended to his success: Love of work, system and order, the will that to-day's work be done to-day, treating all customers alike—a child being able to transact business as satisfactorily as an adult,—waiting on as many customers as possible himself and recognizing them all in some way, never speculating outside of his own business, selling good goods and insisting that they be will kept.

Mr. McEldery took a genuine interest in the welfare of his employes, always doing what he could to assist them, and has the satisfaction of seeing most of his former men in places of trust. He gets credit for turning out more commercial travellers than any other retail man in Ontario and is proud of that credit. Among others prominent on the road, who were schooled in Mr. McEldery's store are· R. W. Gowanlock with Perkins, Ince & Co., J. A. McCrea with Davidson & Hay, John Hayden with Sloan & Crowther, E McEldery with a New York house.

MR. JOHN McELDERY.

While Mr. McEldery has declined all overtures to enter municipal politics, he has taken a lively interest in all that pertains to the welfare of the city. On account of his good business tact and executive ability, he has rendered valuable services to the Guelph and Ontario Loan Society, of which he is a director. He is also a member of the council of the Board of Trade and acted as secretary last year. He takes a special interest in the Retail Grocers' and Bakers' Association, of which he was one of the prime movers, and the association has recognized his services by electing him president for this year.

Mr. McEldery is a strict temperance man, and a leader in all moral movements and educational matters, acting as trustee and secretary of the Separate School Board. He is a firm believer in life insurance, and acts as city agent for the Mutual Life Insurance Co., of New York, carrying a large amount on his own life. He believes an endowment policy the best investment a young man can make. He is married to the eldest daughter of ex-mayor John Harris of the city and has two children.

The growth and prosperity of the fair inland city in which Mr. McEldery has pursued his career are due to the sum of efforts made by those of its citizens who are of his stamp. He belongs to that useful class of men whose accumulations represent enterprise that his benefited his community as much as himself. The extent to which his name as a trader is known through the country surrounding his city is as great as that of any business man in Guelph, and he has helped in a large degree to place that district under tribute to Guelph trade, the merit of his goods, the honesty of his dealings and the attractiveness of his store having made his stand on its own account, a place to which a very large body of outside custom gravitates. This brought people to Guelph who had no other primary motive to come to Guelph, but who being there would have secondary objects pressed upon their attention, and would buy in other lines from other dealers. Thus his business was an agency in the building up of the fine market Guelph has to-day. A man who has trained so many men for the road gives signal evidence in that record alone of a high order of business ability, and the fact that he is looked to as a commercial father by those whose business powers he has helped to unfold points to personal characteristics of the utmost value to business men. In fact his personal and his business character are inseparable. There are men who are urbane in social intercourse and brusque in business. Mr. McEldery's nature is the same in all relations, and tells powerfully to his advantage in the regard of the people.

BOOKS, CATALOGUES, ETC.

THE LAWS OF BUSINESS, by C. A. Fleming. Owen Sound : Printed at the Northern Business College Steam Press. This book is intended for the use of commercial students, but will be found of great service to those whose business education is going on in the shop, where contact with the concrete problems of business will teach the value of a work of this particular kind. Not only the law but the very parlance of business needs to be better known, as too few know what is meant even by the terms that denote processes, transactions, documents, etc., that the complex machinery of commerce has called into being. The matter of the book is very directly and lucidly presented. Its form is a credit to the press from which it issued. It sells at $1.50.

IT TAKES BRAINS TO RUN A GROCERY.

Says Charles Dudley Warner in Harper's Magazine : " Many men who would make very respectable Presidents of the United States could not successfully run a retail grocery store. The anxieties of the grocery would wear them out. For, consider the varied ability the grocery requires—the foresight about the markets to take advantage of an eight per cent. off here and there ; the vigilance required to keep a 'full line,' to dispose of goods before they spoil or the popular taste changes ; the suavity and entegrity and duplicity and fairness and adaptability needed to get customers and keep them ; the power to bear the daily and hourly worry ; the courage to face the ever present spectre of 'failure,' which is said to come upon ninety merchants in a hundred ; the tact needed to meet the whims and complaints of patrons, and the difficulty of getting the patrons who grumble most to pay in order to satisfy the creditors. When the retail grocer awakens in the morning he feels that his business will not come to him spontaneously ; he thinks of his rivals, of his perilous stock, of his debts and deliquent customers. He has no 'constitution' to go by, nothing but his wits and energy to set against the world that day, and every day the struggle and the anxiety are the same. What a number of details he has to carry in his head (consider, for instance how many different kinds of cheese there are and how different people hate and love the some kind) and how keen must be his appreciation of the popular taste ! The complexities and annoyances of his business are excessive, and he cannot afford to make mistakes ; if he does he will lose his business, and when a man fails in business (honestly) he loses his nerve, and his career is ended. It is simply amazing, when you consider it, the amount of talent shown in what are called the ordinary businesses of life. "

Mr. Warner shows so much familiarity with the trials of the grocer, says the Merchants' Review, appears so thoroughly to appreciate the ability required to successfully conduct the business, that we would not be surprised to hear that he once had engaged in grocery business himself. But he has certainly been misinformed regarding the number of merchants that fail to permanently establish themselves. To say that ninety out of one hundred merchants eventually fail is a gross exaggeration. It is doubtful if 40 per cent meet with failure. It is proper that this mistake, often perpetrated, should be corrected ; otherwise the anxieties of the retailers, which are heavy enough, would be made worse if the outlook was so gloomy as it is thus made to appear.

TELEPHONE ORDERS.

The telephone is one of the latest props of the credit system. It stands between the grocer and that difficult class of people who have the means to afford a telephone but not the will to pay their trade bills. The fact that they have some means causes them to be ranked and cherished by the grocer as eligible customers, whom it would be folly to offend. He would be loath to see their trade go to his rival, though probably he recognizes also that intrinsically there would be little to lose in the withdrawal. Still he likes to keep them. A haughty, exacting customer of some social pretensions is always valued more than a meek one who does twice the trade and pays his money. The haughty one is supposed by other customers to be hard to suit, and where he deals, they reason, things must be satisfactory. The grocer looks at him in this light and values him as an advertisement. The great difficulty is to get money out of the advertisement.

But even of such hard-paying customers as are pampered somewhat by the grocer for the sake of the advertisement their trade affords, the majority dread the direct way of asking for credit. They prefer the roundabout way, particularly if they are a very long time and a pretty big amount in arrears already. The telephone comes to their assistance and softens the difficulty. How easy it is to dictate an order in a voice of high pitch and supercilious tone through the telephone ! And since people cannot pay by telephone, how hard is it for the grocer to ask back if cash on delivery is meant ! That inquiry would prostrate the patrician customer by its impudence. The goods have to be put up and sent, the grocer hardly daring to give the driver orders to insist on c. o. d. That would be so outrageous that it would be proclaimed from the housetops.

Then, too, the telephone comes in handy for the running up of little bills that perhaps the breadwinner of the family would not have countenanced. The thing is so easily done by the domestic rulers that before long a big account is run up by a series of little occasional calls. Then the thing has perhaps to be put off because money is lacking to meet its unexpected proportions. Here inadvertence is the fault, and one or two experiences will probably work the cure.

The telephone accounts are the least satisfactory to the dealer. He does not know whether cash will be paid on delivery or not, and therefore does not know whether to give the weight of sugar, for example, that he would give if cash were paid. Nor does he like the surprises that he occasions when he hands in his bill, as the amount of telephone orders is sure to be under-estimated. Exception is also taken to the goods that are sent on such an order. The buyers not having seen and chosen such as she likes, can find fault, send back and cause a great deal of trouble about a small matter. Also there are things a customer would be ashamed to ask in the store to have delivered, because of their smallness and insignificant value, that she will ask over the telephone to be carried a mile or two. Another nuisance is caused by the ladies' utter lack of consideration. If they had to go down town to give an order they would take forethought and make out a list, so as to have in it everything they wanted that day. They are not always careful to do this in telephone ordering. They will sometimes occasion half-a-dozen runs for what might have been delivered in one. It is aggravating, too, for the grocer to feel when he is asked a price through the telephone, that the same inquiry will be addressed from the same customer in the next breath to another grocer. Among the agencies for beating down prices and developing cutting the telephone must not be left out.

THE GUESSING GROCER.

" I will tell you who are fools in the grocer business," said one of our wide awake and progressive men in the trade. " It is the men who guess at everything. When they buy vegetables they guess at what they should be sold at. When they are asked how much profit they make on goods sold, they do not know, but guess at the per cent. This guessing system is the ruin of those who carry on their business by it, as well as those whose misfortune it has been to be in the locality of the guessing grocer. " The man who does not positively know, but has to guess at how he shall conduct his business, has no right to be a retail grocer. In a business where goods have to be sold in small quantities, entailing extra labor and carefulness in the matter of weighing and measuring, and sold at a very small margin of profit, there is no room for guessing. There must be knowledge of cost and loss liable to ensue, especially when dealing in perishable goods, in order to make success certain. The men who make money in the business are not guessers. You may find a few who are the exception, but this does not prove that the grocer who understands his business thoroughly labors to disadvantage. Grocers who do business on the guess principle are fools in the trade.—Retail Grocers' Advocate.

ROUND MEN IN SQUARE HOLES.

"Mr. Brown, I sez, I've more brains than enough, I sez, and I've no need to work for nothink, I sez." Such was a remark we chanced to overhear, while a garrulous female, who chose as her rostrum the pavement immediately in front of our office door, was dilating on her social and economic grievances to a bosom friend. The conversation was carried on in so high a key and loud a tone, that it was impossible not to learn something of the speakers who, we gathered, followed the respectable profession of the wash-tub. This, however, by the way; the remark, quoted above, arrested our attention. Its modesty is not less remarkable than its shrewd grasp and appreciation of a great economic principle. We could not help feeling envious that providence should have endowed a laundry woman—our own laundress, for aught we know—with a superfluity of brain tissue, but the spark of jealousy was speedily extinguished by the rising tide of gratitude, for we felt that a new text had been given to us, a new song placed in our mouth.

The man who works for nothing is a fool—downright, unvarnished fool, the Peter Simple of commercial life. And the man who works for less than the market value of his labor is also a fool, only in a lesser degree. And the question arises, how many men, possessed of brains enough to earn a livelihood in certain pursuits, are simply working for nothing as a business for which they have no apitude? A list of storekeepers would include a good round number of men who do not understand the first principles of retail trading, and are losing money hand-over-fist. These men are working for nothing, and less than nothing—they are working a an absolute loss ; spending their substance and the substance of others on that which is not bread. They are not devoid of a certain amount of business ability, but they are not capable of making successful storekeepers. They do not possess the necessary capacity for detail, the requisite knowledge of the requirements of their particular district, the power of buying judiciously and well; they lose touch of the market, and in a hundred different ways display their inaptitude for the business they are embarked in. Far better for such men and for the trade in general, that they put up the shutters without needless delay, and seek pastures new. Reckless traders undermine the foundations of commercial stability, and cutting prices, giving extended credit, and subsequently and finally going insolvent, do an infinitude of harm to their local competitors, who, by an exercise of thorough business principle are making headway. It is a pity the trade does not possess the power to compel such a dangerous, because ignorant, competitor to retire from the field, and it is a satisfaction to know that the wholesale houses exercise considerable caution when supplying unpractical men with credit. The evil still exists, however, but may be a few may realize the simple fact that working at a loss is worse than working for nothing, and turn their abilities in other directions. The learned professions have safeguarded their interests, and the interests of the public, by insisting upon all candidates passing a severe examination before admission, and it would be well if the great distributing houses could constitute themselves into an informal tribunal as to the aptitude for the trade possessed by a would-be customer. At present his financial status is the only point taken into consideration, but, although the suggestion may at first sight appear to be slightly quixotic, a fuller inquiry will have to be adopted, if the best interests of the trade are to be conserved and the stability of established houses protected.—The Storekeeper, New South Wales.

In some cities over the border the women are signing pledges not to shop after 6 p. m. There are few movements more deserving of the support of wives and sisters. Late shopping by women is responsible for by far the greater proportion of long hours to which workers in stores the world over are subject. No reason exists, except the inconsiderateness of the purchasing public, for keeping stores open after 6 p. m. on ordinary evenings or until nearly Sunday mornings on Saturdays. The habit of late shopping is hard to cure, and it is a bad one because of its many evil effects, especially upon girls of tender years. It is all the more to be regretted, because it could be avoided by the large majority of those who have contracted it.—Ottawa Evening Journal.

HAMILTON BOARD OF TRADE.

The annual meeting of the Hamilton Board of Trade was largely attended. The new mode of electing the members of the council and board of arbitration by ballot was tried and found satisfactory. President John Knox read the annual report of the council, which showed mercantile interests and trade generally to be in a satisfactory state and crop prospects good.

A clause stating that the board had grave doubts of the T. H. and B. Co. having any connection with the Vanderbilt system excited a warm discussion and the president finally agreed to strike it out.

The report of Secretary C. B. Smith showed that the present membership is 299. The financial statement showed receipts, $1,398.77; disbursements, $1,335 96; balance, $62.81.

A motion to elect Ald. Carscallen solicitor for the T., H, and B., a member of the board, excited considerable opposition, and Mr. MacPherson called for a ballot. As a member needs to be elected by a two-thirds vote this resulted in the defeat of Ald. Carscallen by yeas 33, nays 20.

The president was authorized to name a committee to arrange for raising a fund to erect a monument to the memory of Sir John McDonald in this city.

The following officers were elected: G. E. Bristol, president; R. K. Hope, vice-president; C. R. Smith, secretary-treasurer. Board of arbitration—Three years, B. E. Charlton, R. A. Lucas, W. H. Gillard, S. C. Balfour; two years, C. Fearman, J. Turnbull, R. Thompson, John Calder; one year, R. S. Steel, J. W. Bickle, J. B. Fairgrieve, S. A. Greening.

Council—Three years, John Knox, F. C. Bruce, A, Turner, W. H. Gillard, J. J. Mason, T. H. Macpherson, George Roach, Senator Sanford; two years, S. C. Balfour, A Gartshore, J. M. Lottridge, J. H. Tilden, H. N. Kittson, D. McLellan, A. Wilson; one year, A. T. Wood, J. B. Fairgrieve, W. Hendrie, M. Legatt, G. E. Tuckett, W. A. Robinson and J. J. Stuart.

POLITENESS A NECESSITY.

Pleasant manners are of most inestimable value to business men, and especially to those who are brought into direct contact with all classes of the public. In the retail line many a business has suffered materially, while others have been entirely ruined by the inability of the proprietor to show a pleasant face continually while being subjected to a badgering by half a dozen whimsical and shallow brained women. "A man may smile, and smile and be a villan still," says the immortal William. Hence, a courteous disposition and affable manners are no criterion of a persons character, and the public may stand more chance of being cheated by the polite dealer than by he of morose and surley temper. But nine out of ten people, particularly if they belong to the fair sex, actually would prefer, if they had a choice, to be cheated by a pleasant-mannered man rather than patronise a grumpy individual of the most undoubted integrity. In our walks about the city we often enter the different stores on our route for the purpose of noting the facilities for doing business the display and quality of goods in stock, and the manners of the proprietors and their assistants. We dislike to pick flaws in the retail trade, but in the interests of the retailers themselves we must say that in general we find more to criticise in the manners of storekeepers and clerks, than in any other of the points mentioned above, and have no doubt that what is true of the trade hereabouts holds good in many other localities. We find enterprising dealers strenuous in their efforts to extend their trade by every channel open to them, and we also find that trade hampered and new patrons repulsed by the absence of so small an essential as common politeness. Now, affability and pleasant manners do not by any means imply servility, and there can be no excuse for the dealer or clerk who fails to display them in the interests of the business. Politeness is one of the few weapons that the small dealer has at his command to meet the competition of larger dealers who buy more cheaply, as the larger the business the greater the number of assistants required, and the less chance of the customers being treated with deference, clerks being as a rule more wanting in this respect than the proprietors of stores. That this advantage is not fully utilised by the average retailer is our firm belief, hence these few remarks.—Merchants' Review.

BRITISH WASTE PAPER.

The waste paper branch of the business at Her Majesty's stationer office is a very important one, says the London Daily News. It is situated in Earl Street, Westminster, a few minutes walk from the main establishment. In the good old days waste paper went as the "perks" of Government officers. The more they sold the fatter they grew, and the sturdier, we may be sure, they stood up for Queen and Constitution, and everything that was staid and respectable and conservative. The best of it was that it often happened that the very men who grew fat on waste paper had the ordering of the stock, and the more they ordered the greater were the "perks" of course. It was a delightful arrangement, but it was too good to be permanent, and in 1852 it was ordered that all waste and unserviceable papers, pens, old directories and other publications, and old and useless and worn out stores of every kind should be returned to the Stationery Office, and latterly, therefore, there has been one stream of new stationery from Westminster to all the Government offices in the kingdom, and a return current of used-up material. It pours in in huge van-loads to the establishment in Earl Street, where premises, formerly in the occupation of a marble mason, have been converted into a busy scene of industry in unpacking, sorting, cutting up, repacking, and despatching to the paper mills, that may be witnessed all the year round. Till some little time ago papermakers contracted for the waste paper here, and entered into a bond to destroy it forthwith. This proved to be unsatisfactory, and there seemed to be no sufficient security against the leaking out of information that ought to be private and confidential. For some time public waste paper was sent to one or two of the prisons in London, to be torn up and sorted by the prisoners. This was not very successful either, and five years ago the Earl Street premises were taken, and everything now goes there. Vans run into the yard with their paper and books stuffed into gunny bags, which are hauled up on to a top floor and turned out upon tables, the tops of which consist mainly of iron gratings. Young women stand at these tables and sort out the paper into ten classes. Much of the stuff is very dusty. and the table tops are grated, so that as the paper is tossed about the dust may fall down below. Once a fortnight the screen round underneath the table is removed and accumulated dust cleared out The sorted papers are thrown into different hoppers, and are shot down to the floor below, where there is a tremendous guillotine cutting-machine, driven by a gas engine. All sorts of secrets and confidential communications are here chopped up so far as to render them unintelligible, and then they are packed up for dispatch to the mills, when purchasers come forward with satisfactory offers. Much of the waste is removed back into gunny bags, which are suspended from hooks in the ceiling, and may be rammed full with a sort of Herculean club which some of the damsels enjoy for the purpose; but most of them apparently prefer to get into the bags and dance up to the top as their companions keep feeding in the waste.

As a result of the meeting of the Retail Grocers' asssoclation held Granulated sugar is to be sold only at six cents per pound, or 17 pounds for one dollar. Yellow sugar five cents per pound up to 50 pounds. The wholesale price of granulated in lots of fifty barrels is 4¾ cents. It was understood, when the Grocers' association was formed, that there was to be no combining to raise prices. Its object was said to be for other purposes entirely.—Halifax Herald, July 1st.

Eggs continue to be high priced this year, and the only reason that can be given for this state of things is the duty on imported eggs. There are hardly any Canadian eggs in the market now, and there have not been any to speak of this year. The present wholesale price of eggs is about 18 cents per dozen, while in other years the price at this season of the year has been about 13 cents. The duty on eggs has been raised to five cents per dozen. This prohibits importation, and takes five cents more for every dozen eggs out of the American workingman's pocket.—Montreal Gazette.

A PECULIARITY OF COMPETITION.

Competition is one of the elements in trade that is recognized as a governing power. Besides contributing these qualities that tend to make trade equitable to the dealer and consumer, it urges the inventor and manufacturer to strive to excel and thus lend a wheel to progress. But competition with all its advantages does not exist without a peculiarity that is well worth consideration. It develops one quality in human nature that is brought out by few other conditions under which business men labor and is one that is seldom acknowledged. It is an apprehension of the superiority of a rival in business, or, to be plain, jealousy. There are few merchants who have not experienced it at one time during their business career and suffered from the follies which attended it. Jealousy in business, however, is more peculiar to young men whose confidence in their own abilities blinds their discretion. They are apt to find, after a short experience in business, that competition stands more in the way of their success than anything else, and that it is a little more than they had calculated upon. The location may be admirable and the profits fair, but a dealer in the same neighborhood is found to be very popular with consumers, and it is difficult to attract their attention. The new merchant soon finds that his shrewd rival is the only man he does not have a kindly feeling for in the neighborhood, and under the sting of disappointment he sometimes finds that he is giving expression to his feelings in the presence of customers, or endeavoring to depreciate the value of his rival's goods by criticising them.

The exhibition of such a disposition not only falls short of accomplising the object which prompts it, but it is in exceedingly bad taste and a cowardly measure to adopt. No one is so quick to recognize a weak point as a prospective customer and nothing causes him to lose confidence so quickly as to hear one merchant run down the goods of another, or to indulge in personalities.

The most successful business men of all times have been those who stood by principle and allowed their actions to be governed by honest and open competition. In doing this it is not necessary to allow competitive dealers to take advantage by unscrupulous methods. A merchant who died the other day, leaving millions as a testimony of his sagacity in business, used to say: "If a man slaps you on one cheek, don't turn the other for him to slap, but knock him down immediately." These men who indulge in abusing their competitors do not need any knocking down. They knock themselves down in the eyes of fair minded people.

Men who make great merchants take advantage of the better influences of competition and strive to increase their trade by maintaining business principles and liberal ideas. These so penetrate every department of their establishment that the patrons cannot fail to become impressed with them.—Chicago Grocer.

RICH AND POOR DEBTORS.

Some men are too rich to be good pay. They buy liberally and they are able to pay and credit must not be refused, because their trade is to be desired. But to get the money! Go to leading merchants of your town and ask which represents the largest amount of credits on their books, the rich or the poor, and they will tell you the former. The poor man is dunned. If his bill runs beyond the customary limit the collector is after him, while the bill of his opulent neighbor goes, if it goes at all, through the mails, as a very, very gentle reminder. Many a merchant will say, "If I could make my collections from my customers who are good, I would not care for the doubful credits," and so "to him that hath it shall be given," etc. The poor man pays for the favors to the rich man, in this regard. The store needs money, and the first accounts to be dunned are the ones where the pay will be forthcoming, and, strange to say, that is from the great mass of men who are living close to the border of want, who are expected and required to pay cash, or, what amounts to the same thing, on very short credit. The poor man, with his cash in hand, pays the penalty of his rich neighbor's habit of running bills and neglecting to take care of them in due time.

In one sense the store keeper (we refer to the large store) does not know his best customers. People who pay cash have no status, no rating in the city establishment. We have a case in mind of a gentleman ordering a carpet at a place where he had been a cash customer for five years. The carpet came in due time to the house marked C.O.D. The gentleman repaired in hot haste to the store and demanded why he had been thus treated—he, an old customer, and as good pay as any that ever entered the place. "Is your name on our books?" inquired the manager. "No, sir," was the answer; "is it necessary in order for me to run a small bill with you that I must already be in debt to you or be in the habit of using my credit?" It certainly was curious, and yet the manager had a good reason for his action. The cash customer does not become known. His cash speaks for him and the individual has no identity there until he gets on the books. How to get the rich to pay is often a serious question. We had a large bill against a jeweller. He had no money but plenty of accounts. "I will turn over some of them as security." "Very well," we say, and he goes to work picking them out for us. "But why not this one?" we ask. "Oh, that would not do, he is one of my best customers and it would drive him away to dun him." "I know it, but it is good," and so we take the accounts against the respectable poor and unmercifully we press down upon them until we get our money, and the rich man, neglectful of his neighbor's rights and his own duty, is safe behind his money bags. It will be ever thus.—The Collector.

A COMMON MISTAKE.

There are some men who seem to think that successful advertising consists simply in getting a great number of replies. Accordingly they word their advertisements with this one object in view. The word "Free" is displayed in heavy gothic type, and the advertiser seeks to give the impression that all he wants is a few addresses to which to send his "beautiful sample assortment" or "valuable premium" without charge.

There is no doubt that this sort of advertising does produce results—results in the form of a large number of postal card applications, mostly ill spelled, and evidently coming from an ignorant class of people, with little money to spend. Anything offered free attracts them, just as molasses draws flies. They are naturally more eager to get something for nothing than the class of people who are in comfortable circumstances. The advertiser who finds the applications and inquiries pouring in upon him, and who sees his mail daily growing in proportions, may think that he is doing good advertising. He may not even find out his mistake until the end of the year, when he comes to balance his books.

The mistake is not an uncommon one, as an inspection of the current newspapers and magazines will show, The reason is that so many advertisers fail to consider what is the prime object of all newspaper advertising. It is to bring the seller in communication with possible buyers. People who are not likely to become buyers are worse than useless. Even with some articles of universal consumption it is better not to make too much of a feature of free offers. Rather write your advertisement so as to attract buyers. The commonest method of attaining this object is to display most conspicuously the name of the article offered for sale. Thus the word "furniture," if given the greatest prominence, will immediately interest the person who is looking for a folding bed or a writing desk. The man who lives in a hall bedroom, and who doesn't want any furniture, will pass the advertisement with a mere glance. On the other hand, if the advertisement offered a handsome match safe to any person who would send a two cent stamp, with his address, the hall bedroom man, and a great many others like him, would send in applications.

Word your announcements so that they will reach the people who are likely to become customers.—Rowell's Advertiser's Manual.

Mr. Hebler is a commissioner appointed by the Hon. John P. Robson, premier of British Columbia, to enquire into the reasons why Eastern Canada does not do a larger business with the Pacific coast province. He has visited a number of the large wholesale houses in Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg and ascertained that they all find the freight rates two high. At present most of the trade of British Colnmbia is done with San Francisco and Portland. the British Columbia merchants would prefer doing this trade with Canadian houses.

A deputation of salt manufacturers, consisting of L. Rightmyer, Kincardine; John Ransford, of Clinton, and W. M. Gray, of Seaforth, had interviews with the Ministersof Customs and Finance to protest against the reduction in salt duties. They are not opposed to a reduction of the duty on fine salt, but think the proposed reduction on salt in bulk is too great, and ask that it be reconsidered. The deputation also urged that a duty be granted on salt which is exported. They were told, however, that the latter request could not be granted.

The firm of James Skinner & Co., established over 40 years in the crockery, china and glassware business, Hamilton, have agreed to lease for a term of years a new warehouse to be erected on the north side of Wellington street, immediately west of Bay. The building is to be of brick and stone, six storeys over a high basement, 51 feet front by about 112 deep, with a lane on both sides giving good light and excellent shipping facilities. The locality is now one of the best in the city for the wholesale trade, the owner and lessor being Mr. John W. Cowan, tea and coffee merchant. The eastern part of the building forming the block, covering altogether 77 feet frontage, is being erected for the owners, Messrs. Pugsley, Dingman & Co., soap manufacturers, of Church street, who may occupy it for their own business. This new block will be one of the loftiest in the city and will give additional life to business in this advancing locality. The work on the buildings has already commenced and will be pushed ahead as rapidly as possible. The transaction, which was negotiated through R. J. Griffith & Co., covers an investment, including the land, of something over $100,000.

WHY SOME MEN FAIL.

The question was recently propounded by a magazine editor to two of our conspicuously successful Americans: "What are the causes of poverty?" One replied: "Ignorance and incapacity." The other said that the prevalent cause is "the number of young men who are wanting in decision and fixity of purpose. If they get into a good place at the start they should stick to it, knowing that by perseverance, industry and ability they win promotion in due course as vacancies occur. But they see or hear of some one making a fortune in Wall street, or in ranching, or in mining, and away they go to try their luck. When they lose, as they do ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, that is the end of them; they can never settle down to ordinary ways of living after that, and their descent is rapid." This reason hits the nail square on the head. Go where we will we will find men who commenced life under the most favorable circumstances, but who are such complete financial wrecks that there is but little hope for their reformation. They may be honest and temperate; they may even possess natural ability of a high order, but lacking in steadiness of purpose, they will never succeed. Had they sufficient will force to stick to one thing, no matter how disagreeable it may oe at first, were they content to advance slowly, they would have no reason now to complain of the "luck" of those who have pushed forward into the front ranks. Another cause of poverty is a lack of self-confidence. Many men seem to have no faith in themselves, consequently no assertiveness, no independence, no pluck and no push. They are afraid to stand up and speak for thenselves, preferring to lean on others. They are afraid to make an investment, because of the possibility of failure; they are afraid to tell what they can do, as they might make an error in doing it. They are cowards in every sense of the word. This is often the result of early training, A boy, naturally timid, is kept in the back ground so presistently and his mistakes are so severely criticised that he grows up into an entirely useless man. Push and fixity of purpose will always bring a measure of success.—Ex.

GROCERIES.

A review of the grocery market this week must still, in the main, be substantially a review of the sugar market, as operations in other lines have been hindered by the strong and uninterrupted flow of orders for sugar. There has been an almost enforced cessation of trade in other departments, not that tea, canned goods, etc., are not wanted and ordered by the retail trade, but that such orders are very secondary to the overwhelming demand for sugar, and have to be put aside until the sugar pressure eases somewhat. A better tone pervades trade since the weather has taken the favorable change it has, rains and cloudy weather having done much to improve the appearance of the fields and to brighten the outlook generally. By the end of the month there will be a big exchange of money to pay the sugar engagements that are being undertaken by the retail trade. Money certainly appears to be more plentiful, in order to maintain the trade that retailers are now doing in sugar. Payments are met with promptness as well.

CANNED GOODS.

With sugar engrossing so much of the general attention, canned goods come in for but little notice. There is nothing at all urgent about the situation of them, and they can stand a little neglect without injury to their prices. The stock is so light that a smart demand would make a small matter of it in a week or two. Tomatoes are firm at $1.55 to $1.60, as they have been for some time. Corn and peas are likewise unchanged and in small compass. Contracts for next season's pack are not numerous this week, though canners quote at $1 to $1.05 for corn, peas and tomatoes. They are reported to be averse to doing business unconditionally, however, on the basis of their own quotations. Strawberries have come on the market and brought down quotations from the points to which the old pack had got. They are selling at $2.25 to $2.40, and would have been cheaper had the crop held off a little longer so as to come all in after the sugar duty had been removed. The market had got into a very good position for the new pack, as most of the old had been disposed of. New lobsters are in and selling at $2.25 in tall tins.

Next week the local trade in canned goods is expected to be large, as there will be a large number of consumers added to those always here by the Teachers' Convention, which is expected to bring in at least 15,000 people.

The Thistle Finnan Haddie Canning Company is putting up its finnan haddie now in flat instead of tall tins, and the stock appearance of the goods is greatly improved by the change.

COFFEE.

Coffee is very dull as the sugar flurry monopolizes attention. Quotations continue as they have stood for some time.

DRIED FRUIT.

Valencia raisins are the best selling line still. The price continues to be an inducement to buyers, but there are some houses which have got out of their low-grade stock and do not quote below 5½c. There is not any scarcity though of low grade Valencias.

They are plentiful and to be had as low as 4¾c. Currants are not in much demand, though prices remain steady at unchanged quotations. Prunes have not reacted from the downward movement of a fortnight ago: they sell yet at 7¾ to 8c. in bags, and 7 to 8c. in cases. Eleme figs in 14 oz. boxes are quoting easier, 10c. being the highest price now asked. The trade in dried fruit feels to some extent the rivalry of new native small fruit, though there is always a good demand in harvest for currants and raisins.

NUTS.

Very few sales of nuts have been made lately. There is but a light demand at this season in any year. Confectioners, not the trade, keep the market moving just now. Prices are unchanged.

RICE AND SPICES.

Rice is still very firm. The market has no more in stock than can be got rid of easily when the harvest demand begins to come in. At present the trade is not large. Spices are not in any particularly noteworthy position.

SUGAR.

The warehouses are fairly inundated with business. There has been no slacking of the demand since it opened above two weeks ago, though the refineries have been working steadily to their full capacity ever since. No one remembers such a sugar season on this market. The demand being equally active on a many times larger scale in the United States, the effect could not be otherwise than to advance the price of raw. Not only on this continent but in Europe the consumption of sugar is now at or near its maximum rate for the year. It was to be expected that prices would go up under such a siege of the demand, and it is remarkable that the advance held off so long. It came on Tuesday when the prices of whites were advanced one-eighth all round, granulated being quoted 5c. in lots of 15 barrels and upwards, and at 5⅛c. in smaller lots. Granulated is in chief request, though there is also a very large trade in yellow. The present prices will probably hold while the demand retains its present strength, but it is likely that they will ultimately lapseback to the point from which they advanced. The advance may be the means of the retailers making a little on sugar, as it is no use now to strain a point to sell the sensational number of pounds—twenty—for a dollar. Yellow sugar is quoted as low as 4c., but there is scarcely any to be had below 4⅛c. Strawberries are now being followed by cherries, and cherries will be followed in turns by rasberries, and the throng of small fruits will continue until the larger ones are due. That means that the sugar market will have an active demand at all events from now until October.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

Syrups are not selling freely. They quote as they did a week ago, low grades being scarce. Molasses are firm at the prices on our list, the shortage in the primary markets being a ruling influence in favor of probably higher prices yet.

TEAS.

A moderate demand is kept up, but there is little attention given to the situation of the tea market, everybody being too much absorbed in the pursuit of sugar to find time to figure on the probabilities in tea. There is quite a stock of new season's Japans, but none of it to sell below 20c. Some old Japan, purchasable at 16c., is to be had. The lowest Congou is 15c., and the lowest Young Hyson 18c. There has not been much doing in Indian teas. Importers are waiting until the quality improves. A fair number of new season's teas have been offered in London. The quality of these continues about the same as previously noticed. The market shows but little alteration, and bidding has been fairly brisk at last week's rates. The average was 10½d.

PETROLEUM.

Canadian continues at 16c. There is a very quiet time in petroleum and its products now. All prices remain as they were last week.

Petrolia crude 1.35½ per bbl. Oil Springs crude $1.35 per bbl. The condition of the crude oil market remains unchanged, every driller having contracts away ahead, but the market will stand the extra production even if a "ghost" or two do make their appearance. The stock, of crude, although very moderate is ample for the requirements of the trade taking into consideration the prospective summer's production. If we are let alone and not influenced by outside considerations, the figures for crude this fall may fairly be put at $1.50 anyway. But—and here this "but" is not to be lightly disregarded we have not our own market in our own Canada. We have reference to the bringing into Canada crude for fuel purposes. A drop of 50 cents a barrel on crude means a loss of $200,000 during the year to the crude producing trade and the concurrent shrinkage of profits, say $50,000 to the refining branch of the business, for, with low priced crude their must be reduced profits on refined as has always been the case. The retailer, too, can make more profits when refined is 15 to 18 cents than when it is 10 or 12 cents per gallon, so that the crude producer, the refiner and the retail merchant are equally interested in the maintenance of values up to fair and equitable standard, which we at present possess with regard to crude. The only action that the oil trade can take to disturb present values and lessen legitimate profits is to set the drill recklessly to work and add to the at present small stock an unnecessarily large one. Of course this view of the present situation is entirely aside from the question of the threatened American "slaughter market" in the (we trust) far future. Both the price of crude and refined are about the same as last week. The above figures is the price to-day, yesterday there were no transactions on 'change.

DRUGS AND CHEMICALS.

There is little fluctuation, and generally trade is steady. The prices quoted in the list remain as they were a week ago. The demand for fly paper has continued good, as also that for hellebore and Paris green. Summer beverage constituents have been quieter on account of the cooler weather.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

There is wanting butter of the finest grades. It is in good demand, but prices keep between 12 and 15c. Medium butter at 10 to 12c. sells well also, a considerable part of the unsatisfied demand for looking grades falling upon that, the low grades used in cooking, etc., being now exceedingly scarce. All dairy tub butter is in light stock and the above prices are firm. Creamery tub is on the market and selling at 21 to 22c. but only to those who want a fancy article. Creamery rolls are 23 to 24c. A few large dairy rolls continue to arrive by express, but may be almost over looked, so small a proportion do they bear to the whole. They sell at 13 to 14½c., and are greatly sought after, because of their being strictly fresh made butter. Pound rolls at 15 to 16c. are not in so strong request, as it is mistrusted that they are simply made over from tub butter.

Cheese is quiet. Spring cheese is 9 to 10c.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

BEANS—Are quiet, but as they are still exceedingly scarce and cannot be done without they are firm and higher at $1.60 to $1.80 in the small lots that they are moving in.

DRIED APPLES—Are in waning interest. The easier price of prunes and the season, which puts strawberries, etc., within easy reach of consumers, make the demand for dried apples quite drowsy. Prices are 7¾ to 8¼c. Stocks are light.

EVAPORATED APPLES—Are not scarce, and they are not active. The same reasons are at the bottom of the dulness in them as for that in sun dried.

EGGS—Are firmer and a little higher. The price has got up to 13c. They are somewhat scarce now, while the demand is keener.

HAY—Is unchanged at $10.50 to $11.50. The weather has recently favored the portions of the crop that were not beginning to mature, and a fair yield may after all be realized.

HIDES—Green are still 5c., but cured have gone down a quarter, a car selling on Monday at 6c.

HONEY—Is very dull and weak at 7 to 10c. for strained and 14 to 16c. for sections. The year's bloom has been good and a large gathering is expected.

HOPS—Large lots change hands at 36c., while medium lots go at 35 to 38c., according to quality. There will be little of the '90 crop left by the time new hops are in.

OATS—Are up again to 52½c.

ONIONS.—There are none but Egyptian, which sell at $4 per sack.

POTATOES—Old are $1.10 to $1.15 on track, and $1.25 to $1.50 out of store. New from the central States are worth $3.50 to $4 in car lots.

TORONTO : Wright & Copp, 40 Wellington St. East.

SKINS—Pelts are 25c., lamb skins 35c., and calf skins 5 to 7c., the latter having dropped a cent.

STRAW—A very light demand for oat straw at $6 to $8 continues.

WOOL—Is as dull as ever at 18 to 19c.

FISH.

The demand is a long way behind the supply. Strawberries are still on the market and the fish trade is never good so long as they are. At this season storekeepers avoid the risk of carrying stock, and the pedlars prefer to drop fish and handle berries on the street, so that there is little doing in fish. Prices are easy. White fish and salmon trout are 6½c. each per lb. Lake herring are plentiful, and down to $1.50 and $1.75. British Columbia salmon are 15 to 16c. There will be a quiet fish market for some time yet.

GREEN FRUIT.

There has been a quieter time than was chronicled a week ago. Oranges have been crowded out considerably by small fruit, and the cool spell has shrunk up the consumption of lemons. Only a few Messina oranges are left, and they sell at $4.50. There are a few Rudis at $6.50 to $7, but the staple oranges of the season are Mediterranean sweets, which sell at $5 to $5.50. Lemons are $5.50 to $6. Bananas are $1.50 for seconds and $2 for firsts. They have limited sale. Reds are scarce yet, but come in rather more freely, cars of mixed being received lately. Pineapples scarcely sell at all, $2 to $2.50 per doz. being the prices just now. Apricots are $2.50, peaches $2, Bartlett pears $6, plums $3.50 to $4, cherries (native) are $1 to $1.25 and strawberries are 6 to 8c. Oakville berries are now nearly all that come in, and this week will finish them. Raspberries are 15c. Two cars of watermelons are on the way from Georgia. A car received early in the week went out at 35c. Tomatoes are $1.75 per four basket crate, and $1 per box.

PROVISIONS.

Trade still lags behind the expectation of dealers, who usually have their best demand now. It is not nearly so good as it was in the corresponding part of last year. Long clear bacon and smoked meats have been the leading stock in demand.

BACON—Long clear is up to 8 and 8½c. the continued demand having brought up the price. Bellies at 10 to 10½c., backs at 10c. and rolls at 8 to 9c. are unchanged.

HAMS—Go out at 11c. to 11½c. according to size, for smoked, and 10 to 10¼c. for sweet pickled.

LARD—Is firm, owing to scarcity of low grade butter, and quotes at 9½c. in tubs and 10c. in pails.

MESS PORK—Is quiet at $15.50 to $16 for heavy and $17 for family.

SALT.

The fact that the bulk of the butter made in the hot weather is packed in tubs improves the market for dairy salt at this season. There is a good output of it. The only change in prices is in the price of barrel salt, which coming now 21c. less on account of the reduction of the duty, sells at $1.18 in car lots. Sacks are 70c., dairy $1.25, rock salt at $12 per ton on track.

MARKETS—Continued.

DRY GOODS.

This is the quiet spell with wholesale dry goods men, and several members of house staffs are now away on their holidays. What the eyes of all are turned towards is the fall trade, which gives promise of being a good one.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, July 9 1891.

There has been more activity in groceries since our last, and in the aggregate a good round quality of goods of various descriptions have left first hands. Sugar of course has been the most active staple, but business in it has led to dealing in other lines and in consequence we have to note a good trade in tea, dried fruit, etc., while the enquiry for coffee is good and it is only the want of supplies that prevents a good brisk movement in it. In fact the grocery market on the whole is an active one and this briskness should haue some sympathetic affect on other lines of trade. Payments have been good, and although there are some complaints, several houses say that they have not had any revivals at all during the past four weeks.

SUGAR.

Sugar is naturally the active feature of the grocery market, and generally speaking it may be considered as the pivot on which the business in other lines that we have to note turns and stocks of raw bed are limited except what is in refiners hands and it is safe to say that there are none fit for grocery purposes. This, as a natural result, acts beneficially on yellows and there has been an active trade in them during the week, while prices have a somewhat firmer tendency at 3¾ and 4c. In granulated attempts have been made to hoist prices to 4⅝ and latterly they have been to a certain extent successful, for it is unlikely that a round quantity could be had under this figure now. Throughout the week, however, it has been moved readily at 4½c, but now the refinery that was selling at the lower rate has advanced its figures also and they are now on a line with competitive establishments as we state above. In the aggregate a good round quantity of stock has been moved, but the demand does not show any abatement.

MOLASSES.

Molasses have been quiet, the distributive demand being inconsiderable. Since our last report another cargo of Barbados is to hand, and have been turned over to a local firm at 40c. per gallon. Most recent cables from the Island quote 20c. as the first cost. Supply offering small.

TEA.

The Budget has had a decidedly beneficial effect on tea, and there is a good enquiry to note at the moment, all the new crop that has so far arrived being picked up, and buyers are awaiting the next consignment. Last years low grades are in good demand, and some round lots have been taken off the market on New York account since our last, the most recent transaction being a lot of 1,000 packages. Blacks are in somewhat better demand.

COFFEE.

There is a good enquiry for coffees, more especially Rios and Jamaicas, but the supply in first hands is practically met, consequently the movement is limited. In fact supplies are presently exhausted until the arrival of fresh stocks which are now at New York the steamer having entered there on Tuesday. They will be on the market shortly, therefore the business that we have noted during the week has been at 20 to 21c. for Rios, and 19½ to 20c. for Jamaicas. Javas are not so brisk, but are held firm at 26c., which is probably the best figure they could be had on.

British Markets.

Having closed out our local business, we are now prepared to give special attention to all lines of

IMPERIAL PRODUCE CO'Y.,

OF TORONTO, LTD.,

69 Front Street East, Toronto.

RICE.

A fair business is to note in this article in a jobbing way at steady prices, while the market has a firmer tendency, due to the tenor of advices from primary markets, which talk of advanced prices. We quote: Patna, $4.50 to $5; choice, $4.25 to $4.50; standard, $3.90; and off grades, $3.50 in car lots.

FRUIT.

Toward the close of the week values on Valencia raisins dropped down to rock bottom, and this led to a fair business in round lots of 1,000 to 2,000 boxes at 3½c., about 6,000 boxes in the aggregate changing hands. This pared down stocks pretty low in first hands, and as a consequence figures have stiffened a fraction or so, but are still below the range we gave in our last report. For business to-day 3¾ to 4c. is about the idea, and advices from New York state that supplies of off stalk are practically exhausted and the market in good shape for improvement. In consequence the feeling here is better and the trade expect some improvement to the position of the fruit shortly. Remarks about currants made last week may be repeated. They are a decided scarcity here and business from first hands is small. The prevailing idea is 5¾c. in barrels, 5⅞c. in half barrels and 6c. in cases to arrive, with an ⅛ to ¼c. additional for any on spot.

In green fruit business is of a seasonable sort and there is no accumulation of supplies of any sort, the movement being sufficient to keep stocks in the right shape. Oranges are unchanged at $6 to $7.50 per case, and lemons steady at $5 to $5.50 per box. Bananas are in good supply but steady at $1-25 to $1.75. and prices are not the drug they were a fortnight ago, but prices remain easy around 10c. In seasonable lines of garden fruit new southern potatoes are commencing to arrive and are selling at 2½c. per lb., while strawberries rule unchanged at 9 to 10c., and cherries $1 to $1.50 per basket.

CANNED GOODS.

In vegetables, corn and tomatoes have been two active lines during the week and stocks of them have been subject to considerable reduction in this connection. In fish business has been on the dull side, salmon moving slowly and dealers do not appear to be influenced by the full reports that have been prevalent. From the coast advices speak of large sales of 1890 pack the most recent being a transaction involving 1000 cases at $4 f.o.b. Canned meats are firm but the advance in prices does not seem to have had much effect on buyers.

FISH.

There is no change in the fish market and no prospect of any in the near future with only a quiet business to note. Herring, mackral, cod and salmon are all fairly steady with but little doing.

HOPS.

There is little activity to note in this product on our market, and business is of the merest jobbing kind, a bale now and then as it is wanted. Advices from across the line show a somewhat easier tendency to the market as the gloomy reports about damages to the gloomy crops are being dissapated. Locally values are more or less nominal, and stocks are small. In fact we know of only a few lots of 11 bales or so that are to be had here, but there are probably more in the country in grocers hands. The lots here are held for 25c., no yearlings offering.

PROVISIONS.

The provision market is dull and quiet, the volume of business being such as precludes the idea of much change. We quote as follows:—Canadian short cut, per barrel, $16.25 to $17.75; mess pork, western, per barrel $15.00 to $15.50; short cut, western, per brl $16.25 to $16.75; hams, city cured, per pound 10 to 11c.; hams, canvassed, per lb 0 00 to 0 00c.; lard, Canadian, in pails, 8¾ to 9c.; bacon, per pound, 9 to 10c.; lard, com., refined, per lb, 7¾ to 8c.

EGGS.

The course of our egg market during the present season so far must be a great disappointment to those pessimists who predicted all sorts of changes from the McKinley bill. Never at any time have prices been abnormally low, and now we have to note a further advance on the advance we noted in our last. This firmness is due to an exceptionally well cleared up market, while considerable quantities have been going across the water mostly on consignment, but they have benefited the position here materially. At present 13c. is the lowest figure, business can be done at which is an advance of ½ to 1c. in last weeks figures.

BUTTER.

There has been little change to the butter market since our last report, and while holders maintain their present attitude there is little possibility of any. At about 18 to 18½c. there is a margin, so buyers say, and they are open for business on this basis, but factorymen will not let go. We think this an unwise course to pursue, as when later makes

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER, issued weekly, subscription price $2.00 per year.

"OUR NATIONAL FOODS," put up in packages only, are not ordinary foods. They are prepared by the conversion of the starch into dextrine. THEY CONTAIN OVER DOUBLE THE NOURISHMENT THAT IS IN FLESH MEAT. A 4 lb. PACKAGE OF IRELAND'S DESICCATED WHEAT AT 25c. CONTAINS 30 GRAINS MORE NOURISHMENT THAN 10 lbs. OF BEEFSTEAK COSTING ABOUT $1.50. THINK OF THAT. People are beginning to find it out, when they ask now for Ireland's Desiccated Wheat in packages they mean it. MONTREAL MARKETS—Continued.

are on the market an accumulation of earlier makes cannot fail to be a regular wet blanket. For Western dairy there is a disposition for business around 14c., but Western buyers have been paying a fraction more, and they have been doing most of the buying in consequence.

CHEESE.

This market has altered somewhat from what we noted last week. The buying fever has apparently burned itself out, while the lack of support from the Britishers is still the more argument for buyers. Factory men however seem stubborn about yielding to any decline, but the range of values in southern New York are a ruling factor when the English buyer is in his present indifferent temper for they are very much below ours more than the usual proportion. Statistically, though, the position is as strong as ever. Stocks on the 1st of July, in Liverpool, were only a mere bagatelle, not more than enough for a few days business on that market and very much below those of last year, while our shipments are 50,000 odd less than they were, and the decrease instead of pulling up has been added to during the last week; this, too, despite the large shipments to London and Bristol, the two markets which have been taking the bulk of the Canadian make this season, and despite all this buyers talk lower and as an actual fact the market has to be written a little off this week, the decline being equal to ⅛ to ¼c. Business though is small, and holders are more or less independent.

GRAIN.

The grain market continues very quiet, with the only movement to note, a small business in oats at somewhat lower prices. In wheat our prices are nominal, but it could not be laid down for less as bullers in Ontario are paying figures equal to them. The stocks in store compared with those of a week ago show a decrease of 30,999 bushels of wheat, 24,365 bushels of corn 32,370 bushels of peas, 11,180 bushels of barley and an increase of 7,407 bushels of oats. Compared with the corresponding date last year there is an increase of 358,760 bushels of wheat, 33,920 bushels of oats, and a decrease of 144,532 bushels of corn, 165,209 bushels of peas, 15,689 bushels of barley. We quote: No. 2 hard Manitoba, $1.10; to $1.12; No. 3 do., 99c; No. 2 Northern, $1.01 to $1.03; feed do., 62c. to 65c.; peas, 86c. per 66 pounds in store; 87c. afloat; Manitoba oats, 52½ to 53½c. Upper Canada do., 55½c. to 56½c. per 34 pounds; corn, 72c. to 75c. duty paid; feed barley, 60; good malting do., 65c. to 67c; rye, 83c. to 84c.

FLOUR.

This market shows a better feeling than a week ago the improvement having its inception last Friday when some enquiry was noted from the country This has led to some movement in car lots, and in addition to this the local demand is better. Enquiry for export is also noted buyers showing a disposition to meet sellers and this led to some shipments the most recent being some 2000 sox at 6d. advance. In consequence enquiries for ocean tonnage are brisk but space to Liverpool is very scarce and firm at 10s. The stock of flour in store shows a decrease of 267 barrels compared with a week ago and 4370 barrels compared with a year ago. We quote:—Patent spring, $5.75; patent winter, $5.30; straight roller, $5.00 to $5.15; extra, $4.50 to $4.80 superfine, $4.00 to $4.30; city strong bakers', $5.50; strong bakers', $5.25.

HALIFAX MARKET QUOTATIONS.

(Wholesale Selling Rates.)

HALIFAX, July 9, 1891.

BREADSTUFFS—We can only repeat what we said last week that this is waiting market. The general experience in our line of business is that June has been an exceptionally dull month, the trade only being from hand to mouth.

The crop prospects remain good on this side of the Atlantic, and have a depressing effect upon the market.

We reduce quotations considerably.

Manitoba highest grade patents, $6.00 to 6.25; High grade patents, $5.60 to 5.75; Good 90 per cent Patents, $5.30 to 5.40; Straight grade, $5.10 to 5.20; Superior extras, $4.80 to 5.00; Good seconds, $4.25 to 4.65; Graham flour, $4.90 to 5.10; Oatmeal, $6; Oatmeal rolled, $6.10; Kiln dried cornmeal, $3 to 3.60; Rolled wheat, $5.50; Wheat bran per ton, $19 to 20; Shorts per ton $26 to 27; Middlings $27.00 to 28.50; Cracked corn, $35; Ground oil cake, $34 to $35; Moulee, $30; Split peas, $4.40 to $4.50; White beans per busbel, $1.80 to 2; Pot barley per barrel, $3.90 to 4.10; Canadian oats, choice quality, 63c. to 65c.; Hay per ton, $11.75 to 13.

SUGAR.—For some time back the uncertainties about the sugar duties has been retarding business in groceries, as it is a leading line, inducing business in other lines, but now that this is removed a brisk trade is expected, especially as the reduction is tempting, and actual necessities alone will compel considerable business as stocks throughout the country in third hands are almost nil. The refineries have reduced their figures about two cents and the salesmen in them are kept busy from an early hour filling the orders that have been crowded in. The customs authorities are still in charge of the refineries, but are releasing refined sugars as they are inspected. It is said that the refiners have a large stock of refined sugar in bonded warehouses which under the new regulations will not have to pay duty. We note that a few days ago a city grocer offered 20 lbs. of granulated sugar for $1, and that another promptly went him one better by advertising that he would give 21 lbs. for that "almighty" piece of money.

Cut loaf, 5c.; Granulated, 4⅜c.; Circle A, 4⅛c.; White extra C, 4c.; Standard, 3¾c.; Extra yellow C, 3½c.; Yellow C, 3⅜c.

MOLASSES.— The molasses market has been quiet, the distributing demand being small. A cable from the Islands quoted 20c. as the first cost with a small supply offering, supplies being nearly exhausted. The new tariff regulations will have no effect here, as there is no stock under 40 test now here, and little if any is imported. A cargo which arrived at Montreal from Barbados last week was sold to a local firm at about 40c. per gallon.

Barbados, 40c.; Demerara, 35 to 38c.; Diamond N. 48c.; Porto Rico, 37 to 38c.; Trinidad, 34 to 35c.; Antigua, 34 to 35.

FISH.—Codfish, hard C. B., $5 to $5.50; Western shore, $4.50, $4.75 to $5; Bank $5 to $5.25. Arrivals have been small, and recent advices state that the Bankers are not doing much.

ST. JOHN, N.B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N.B., July 9, 1891.

The holiday last week seemed to make trade more brisk than otherwise, as there was a good demand for all lines of groceries. Eggs are somewhat firmer with barely enough coming to supply the demand.

FLOUR.—There has been a steady demand for flour the past week, and prices have remained as when last quoted, though the tendency seems to be downward. Manitoba patents $6.15 to $6.20. Ontario high grade $5.65 to $5.70; Medium $5.45 to $5.50.

MEAL—Is still dull, and with but a limited quantity selling. The price is $3.40 to $3.50

SUGAR—The demand for sugar still keeps up, as the lower price has caused a much larger consumption. The ruling price is 3¾ to 3⅞c. for yellows and 4½ to 4⅝c. for granulated.

MOLASSES—One or two cargoes of molasses have arrived lately from Barbados, but the price remains unchanged, 38 to 40c.

FISH—Large codfish have been in good demand, though the market is well supplied with mediums, $4.25 to $4.40 for large, $3.90 to $4.10 for medium, pollock $2 to $2.10. Smoked herring are a little easier, 10 to 11c. is now asked.

EGGS.—Have been quite scarce and have advanced from 11 to 15c. which now seems the ruling price.

BUTTER—The demand has not been as large as the supply, consequently lower prices are being obtained which is from 15 to 18c.

POTATOES—Are selling readily at $2.

FEED—Still keeps scarce without any change in price.

RICE—Is selling at $3.65 to $3.75.

There will not be a baseball match at the coming Toronto grocers' picnic. At least the members will not challenge a team from any other association, as was at first intended. They went down to Victoria Park Monday and hired a team of Berkeley school boys to practice on. Among those on the grocers' team were Messrs. Clark, Booth, Mills, McCulloch, Saunders, Roberts and Binnie. The grocers went to the bat first. That was as far as any of them got, for they were put out in rapid succession. The boys then got to the bat and stayed there for the rest of the day. The association representatives are badly used up. The ex-president and the ball had a collision and his left eye is in a sling. All the others have spent most of their spare time since applying arnica, electric oil, and other remedies to their aching bodies.

The neglect to look after minute details in the factory is a source of great loss to many producers.

Credit is often too cheap and overbuying far too common. Don't be guilty of the one, and don't abuse the other.

POINTS TO REMEMBER.

If you would write the kind of advertisements which are read be brief and concise. Try to see how little you can write rather than how much. But make the advertisement readable. I do not believe that disconnected sentences are readable. A great many advertis ments are constructed on this model :—

BLANK'S PIANOS.

FOR YEARS THE STANDARD.

Remarkable for delicacy of touch and tone.

Used and indorsed by the leading composers and musical experts abroad and at home.

I believe in arranging such statements in smooth, grammatical sentences. People are not used to the omission of verbs and conjunctions in their reading matter. Make it read straight ahead as though it had been prepared for the literary columns of a magazine, and see how much more attractive it will be to the eye as well as to the understanding.

Be original, but don't strain after originality. Don't confound eccentricity with genius. Long haired individuals, with no end of peculiarities, are sometimes tolerated on account of other merits, but eccentricity in itself does not constitute a desirable stock in trade. You had better leave the Powers style and other strongly individualized styles of advertising severely alone, as imitators generally get all of the faults, with few of the virtues, of those they imitate. Be natural.

Don't exaggerate. It doesn't pay in the long run. Because a great many advertisers exaggerate ought to be a good reason in itself why you should not follow in their footsteps. If you can once get the public to believe that you are more careful in your statements and more honorable in your dealings than your competitors a great deal has been accomplished. A lady remarked to me once, as she was looking over the dry goods announcements in the newspapers: "I never read so-and-so's advertisements any more." She had been attracted to their store several times by lying advertisements and was naturally indignant at being deceived. Thereafter she was deaf to anything they might say. The man who wrote those advertisements no doubt thought he was doing a big thing for his house in representing the goods at so much beyond their actual value. But it would have been better if he had never written anything. Advertising will not sell an article that does not possess real merit. All that has been claimed for advertising is that it will bring buyer and seller together. To effect a sale the seller must have something that suits the buyers. —Exchange.

Rivalry, open, fair, good natured and enterprising, is the life of business.

The Committee will meet at the close of the Association meeting and make the last revision. Return tickets are placed at 25c. by boat from Yonge street wharf for adults, with childrens' tickets at 15c. SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

The Patrons of Industry are in this country favored with a good deal of gratuitous advertising. Their attempt to gain a foothold has been aided by the advantage which seeming success gives to a struggling cause. That they have not succeeded is a fact; that they have seemed to succeed partially is due to the reports of their meetings, circulation of their professed principles, laudation of their aims and personal notice of their leaders and organizers. All these oblique indications of progress have come from the news paper press, whose references in those and other connections to the Patrons, have roused that curiosity which advertisements awaken in anything new that is sought to be launched upon public attention. People who never heard of the Patrons are made inquisitive concerning them by such news items, they are led to take an exaggerated estimate of the Patrons' numbers and influence, and soon are on the high road to becoming Patrons themselves.

It is possible in this way to make that a success which intrinsically has not the elements of success in it. If reports of lodge meetings contain complimentary references, if an enthusiastic tone pervades accounts of movements to organize, the aid thus given will have a strong effect in forwarding the union of consumers that the Patrons aim at. Lately the Patrons have been hailed by several newspapers in terms that would leave the impression on readers that a general emancipation from the bondage of trade was a crying necessity, and that the Patrons were to be the instrument of the people's deliverance. It is noticeable that identically the same matter has more than once appeared in different papers at about the same time, which is apt to cause a suspicion that its form was due to a member of the society and not to any of the papers' own staff. It also suggests the possibility that the newsy paragraphs with headings calculated to stimulate strong interest may be paid for as advertising matter.

* * * *

One thing is clear: it is not to the interest of newspapers that the Patrons should succeed in fastening their shackles upon the trade of this country. If retailers have to forego the greater portion of their profits because the Patrons get a controlling hand upon the trade of the country, the retailers will have to cut down the expenses of doing business, and one expense that will be unnecessary in such a supposed subjection of the trade will be that for advertising. When the country has got organized into lodges of Patrons of Industry, each with its own storekeeper bound to it, where will there be need for advertising, every group of consumers being bound to deal with none but a particular dealer, and that dealer aware that all consumers outside of his group are arranged in similar systems round their dealers? No trader will be able to dislocate from another trader's custom a single consumer, and he will be sure of what he has. Then why advertise? There will be no need to advertise, and the occupation of the newspapers now booming the Patrons will be gone. The local traders have heretofore given these papers strong support. It is difficult to see, looking ahead or looking backward, any reason for the remarkable readiness such papers have shown to make themselves the auxiliaries virtually to co-erce traders to surrender the greater portion of their profits.

* * * *

We have an outspoken newspaper here and there, and the Huntingdon Gleaner is one of them. That journal has not feared to risk the alienation of a few agricultural subscribers by speaking the truth. It opposes the attempt to put the trade of the country upon an arbitrary and irrational basis, and for this has drawn upon itself the displeasure of the Patrons. It does a public service by taking the attitude it takes. The newspaper press generally would not only be working in its own interest but would be benefiting its readers if it would leave the Patrons to stand or fall on their own merits. To give them a factitious importance is not called for by the duty of that press to the public.

* * * *

Newspapers have little to gain by the advancement of the combine principle among either consumers or distributors and manufacturers. The more that principle informs departments of trade or bodies of consumers, the deeper is buried the hatchet of competition, and the less reason have producers and others in the same line to vie with one another in the advertising ring. The competition which is least fettered is best for the newspapers, and it is hard to reconcile with an apprehension of that truth the more than lukewarm support the Patrons get from certain papers in this country.

* * * *

Despite the help of the press in question the cause of the Patrons languishes. Lodges do not spring into existence under the wand of the professional organizer, and the farmers show a commendable hard-headedness in yielding to the persuasions of the emissaries of the society. The farmers indeed have their own reasons, because they have their own experience, to counsel them. Theirs is the only trade in the country which has given a trial to the plan of co-operative buying, and the Grange they have to a very large extent given up as a failure. The Patrons regard all producers as eligible for membership to their society, and would put all mechanics', etc., on the same footing as farmers. This is not in accord with the movements towards union among farmers, who have regarded mechanics, etc., as very much in the same category with tradesmen. For that among other reasons the society is not apt to come to much strength. Reports from the United States show it to be a waning movement there.

Men of the Times.

MR. J. E. GANONG.

"You season with sports your serious hours."
—Dryden.

An individuality that is the mainspring of a very far, extending and well, established business is that of Mr. J. E. Ganong, the youthful and energetic head of the St. Croix Soap Company, St. Stephen, N. B. Mr. Ganong was born in 1866, and has lived for the most of his life in the town of his birth, which is the seat of his company's extensive soap works. His education, well begun at St. Stephen, was continued at Fredericton, where he went through the greater part of a university course, and was only prevented from proceeding to his degree by an inviting opportunity to enter business. That opportunity presented itself and was seized in 1885, when the young student quit his studies and accepted a position with his father in the St. Croix Soap Company. He gave close attention to his duties from the outset, and laid the ground work of the thorough and practical knowledge that makes him so capable a manager to-day. At the end of three years his father died, and the management of the business devolved on Mr. J. E., who has since held that onerous position with credit to himself and great advantage to his company. The clever financier of the firm, Mr. C. W. Young, was admitted into partnership in the St. Croix Soap Company a short time before the death of its founder, Mr. J. E. Ganong's father.

MR. J. E. GANONG.

The St. Croix Soap Company was incorporated in 1884. Its business was a very flourishing one therefore in 1888 when the guidance of it fell into the present hands. Since 1888 the volume of its trade has more than doubled, which satisfactory expansion is due, both to the excellence of the Company's soap and to the careful engineering of its business. The strong favor in which Surprise soap is held proves that it is a good thing, but many a good thing has remained in obscurity, not because it was wanting in anything, but because it was controlled by men who did not do their part to make and keep it conspicuous. Business men must advertise to withstand the tendency of even the very best thing to gravitate towards oblivion. The keeping in mind of that which they seldom or never hear of is too heavy a task to lay on the memory of the public. They need constant reminding to ingrain the impression that you want to make. This fact was apprehended by the manager of the St. Croix Soap Company. He believed that Surprise soap had merit that would carry it farther than the limits of its distribution in 1888. He consequently advertised on a much larger scale and the results answered to his expectations. The business developed rapidly, the demand over the territory in which the soap had for years been known became much more compact, and new regions of consumption were added, until the output of the Company became doubled. The same able advertising policy is continued, and the St. Croix Soap Company is to-day one of the largest advertising concerns in the country. It did not relax its advertising efforts because it had realized an unusually full measure of success through the putting forth of them. Advertising is as necessary to the preservation of a reputation as it is to the attaining of one. An article of commerce may be nourished into wonderful popularity by the liberal use of printers' ink, but the withdrawal of that sustenance will in most cases be followed by the early collapse of the best reputation. Advertising can reverse the fate of being born to blush unseen or it can keep the confirmed reputation from sinking into decline. The name of Suprise soap is now a familar one throughout the Maritime, St. Lawrence and Lake provinces. And it had not the advantage of a starting point that was a geographically central one. If it had it probably would have been equally well known over an additional area, on the other side of its distributing point, as large as that it has already covered. A house in one of the Maritime Provinces, that can establish a business with almost numberless connections halfway across the continent, could by the exercise of the ame energy in the same .me spread its business from ocean to ocean, with the seat of its manufacture in the midst of the country.

But advertising was only one of the means which Mr. Ganong used, and the use of that one rather illustrates what is a leading tenet in his business faith. His own ability was a fertile source of measures for the advancement of his firm's interests, measures that have always been attended by success. The local interests of the house have always been well attended to in the various towns and cities where it has resident representatives. This fact is significant, showing not only that good men are selected, but also that the selection of them is in good hands. This is a very important matter, and is a material factor in the results that have been achieved by the St. Croix Soap Company. A manager ought to be above all things a judge of men. The men he selects are to be his proxies in the various spheres of their duty. The thing he would do himself is what he wants done in every case, and the recognition of the qualities specially called for by the position is not vouchsafed to all men who are managers.

Mr. Ganong's activities have not been confined to business solely. They have found free play in the public and social environment of his life. He is secretary of the Liberal Conservative Club of the county of Charlotte. He is a hearty supporter of all movements for the benefit of trade and the good of his town and country. His capacity for hard commercial work appears to be enlarged rather than further taxed by attention to the duties of citizenship. With the ardor of youth he gives the encouragement of his example to athletic sports. He is secretary of the St. Stephen Curling Club. He is also a prominent member of another athletic club, and is a member of a skating rink company in his town. His patronage of manly exercises is itself a healthy influence in his town, and one that in its effect upon the welfare of the young men is incalculably good.

The outlook for the St. Croix Soap Company is, like its retrospect, a very gratifying one, as the best years of its manager are yet before him. His sagacity will develop itself and the possibilities of his house. In the few years of the firm's existence it has given ample earnest of what it will be likely to do with the momentum of its past success and the experience of its present manager behind it. In a few years there has been progress made that would be a credit to a closed record. This has not been because the harvest was large and the laborers few, for in the particular line of production in which Mr. Ganong's company has been engaged, competition was both sharp and ubiquitous. The sheer force of merit, able management, or both, had to be on the side of those who would win a fair share of the general success.

THE ADVERTISEMENT RANKS AS NEWS.

The reputable trade press has done more than any other agency to lift the advertisement out of its former subordinate position, and place it on a level with the news paragraph, or the editorial comment. It has always been, but now is very generally recognized to be, co-ordinate in importance with any other description of a paper's contents. Before the days of high-class trade journals the portions of a newspaper given up to advertisements were more or less popularly regarded as space that had not been reclaimed by the pens of those who provided the reading matter. It was deemed of subsidiary usefulness or interest. But the trade paper put it on a different footing. It made advertising a department, the natural accompaniment of that reading matter which is of the very essence of a trade paper—the market review. The market review deals with prices and gives the ups and downs of the supply and demand, the sort of information that is primarily the object of trade paper's existence. The advertising department is a directory to show what constitutes the market, and it is as important to know that as to know the functional movements of the market. The trader looks as often to see who are the distributors or collectors of the merchandise he wishes to buy or sell as he does to find out what the ruling price is. In fact the latter class of knowledge is of no service to him without the former, and he naturally seeks the one where he finds the other.

Thus the trade paper has redeemed the advertising columns of modern newspapers from the class in which they long lay. They presented to the trader in the proper light the nature of advertisements as a department of matter secondary in importance to none, and they established the habit of looking for interesting matter in the advertising columns. The advertisements of the trade paper are read not incidentally, but usually with a curiosity that is as strong and as peculiar as is the curiosity aroused by the reading matter. And as it is necessary that the reading matter should be fresh and pertinent, it is equally necessary that the advertising matter should be bright and pointed. The space given to each advertiser is like a plot in a garden. As it pleases the eye to see all the plots looking trim, fresh and neat, so it is an agreeable effect to the reader of the trade paper to see the advertisement brightly varied and often changed. The plots in which the plants of every brief period of transitory vegetable life are placed change their appearance every week or so, they are watered, weeded and raked. The process of cultivation is ceaseless. It ought to be so with a paper's advertising department. Ench advertiser is the editor of his own space, and it ought to be his study to change and refresh it as often as possible. The effect of such care on the part of all advertisers would be to increase still more the interest that is taken in this branch of the journal, as with so many interested and capable persons at work upon it, it should be the best edited department in the paper.

THE WANT OF AN INSOLVENT ACT.

A strong feeling exists throughout the entire mercantile community that an insolvent act would have a beneficial effect on the trade of the country. Some of the recent decisions given on the Ontario Act respecting assignments have caused considerable alarm among the wholesale merchants, some of the sections of the act having been held to be "ultra vires." The decision given recently by Judge Galt on section 9, places the creditors in a very awkward position, for in consequence of this decision, should a creditor get an execution into the sheriff's hands before an assignment is made, the other creditors are powerless to take the estate out of the hands of the sheriff and place it in the hands of a man of their own choosing, who in all probability is better fitted to wind it up. The sheriff goes on winding up the estate under the Creditors' Relief Act, and the creditors have no control over him whatever as to the manner in which the assets shall be realized, and they receive no notification other than the ordinary sheriff's notice, which a number of them may never see or hear of. Therefore the estate may be distributed among only a few of them, whereas an assignee is bound to notify by registered letter each creditor whose name he finds in the insolvent's books or becomes aware of in any other way.

An assignment made under the Ontario Act or an act of any of the Provinces, makes no provision for the discharge of the insolvent, because the provincial parliament have no power to pass an insolvent act, which can only be passed by the Dominion parliament. Consequently many deserving men who have been unfortunate, cannot get their discharge because some greedy creditors refuse to sign it.

A very large number of the wholesale merchants, retail merchants and others who clamored for the repeal of the Insolvent Act in 1879, would be very glad to have the same act in force to-day. Such strong pressure was brought to bear on members of parliament, that Sir John Macdonald and his government were powerless to stop the repeal of the act, so the act was repealed by a large majority. Sir John voted against the repeal and expressed his opinion that those who were so anxious to be without an Insolvent Act would find that they had made a mistake. The Insolvent Act on the whole was a good one, and the principal argument used against it was that any one could get a discharge. Certainly any one could get a discharge when the creditors took no trouble to stop it. They had the power to do so if they chose to exercise it.

The Hon. J. J. C. Abbott, the present leader of the government, framed the Insolvent Act and thoroughly understands the question, and it is not at all improbable, if our boards of trade and the business community take the matter up now and bring it before the government, that an insolvent act can be got next year.

THE DAY OF SMALL THINGS.

The liberal and large spirit of trade in great centres and large establishments, is apt to leave the impression upon the mind of the superficial observer that there is an immense unnecessary waste going on all the time. That appears to be the case. No account seems to be taken of little things, and the refuse heap is supposed to be a costly pile by the end of the year. This is as the fact seems, not as it is, for there is a very careful collection made of the odds and ends that are accounted waste in a large business house. Small dealers are not usually so careful, though to them the extravagance of doing business on a large scale seems greatest. The bits of string, the scraps of paper, the fragments of old packing cases, and the numberless remains or ruins of damaged stock, do not go to the pile of debris that is to be carried and deposited out of sight at cleaning up time. They are not swept up. They are very carefully gathered up, assorted, and made into neat looking collections whose value will tell in a few weeks. In all the big stores of the cities there is a boy employed solely to gather bits of string, paper, etc., whose duties warrant his employment at a fair rate of pay, quite as much as a boy would earn in any other capacity. If this is true of large stores it is no less true of small ones. If a boy can make his pay and something for his employer, by saving such scraps from the refuse pile in a large store, it surely will pay storekeepers of all degrees to practise the same economy.

The lavish ways of some merchants, their sovereign disdain for the bits of paper and string that fall on the floor, etc., are not typical of the time, and the maxim that "money saved is money gained" is held to even more firmly than in the more primitive days of trade when that maxim was coined. The greater stir and bustle of business create a cloud of dust through which the observer cannot always penetrate into the details, but those details are on principle what would be considered quite petty by those not well grounded in commercial economy. Certain frugal and careful habits of this description may be designated as "small" by people who have not the rudiments of a business training, but they are the means whereby the leakages are soldered up, and whereby the solvency of the trade is maintained in the face of the severe competition that meets him everywhere.

HINTS ON BOOKKEEPING.

The success of every merchant depends largely on the manner in which his books are kept.

A man may be a good buyer, a first-class salesman, and have a genial manner that will attract customers to his shop, yet his business may not prosper, because his books are not kept in a methodical manner and regularly posted up.

Country storekeepers neglect their books more than any other class of merchants. In the larger towns and cities where extensive businesses are done, competent bookkeepers are usually employed who devote the whole of their time to the work, and in such establishments the bookkeeping is generally well attended to, but the average country merchant who has to do his own bookkeeping or trust it to incompetent clerks, gets his books so muddled that they are a heavy load on his mind by day and a nightmare at night.

In order to make his business a success the proprietor should know at least once every month, how much he has purchased, how much he has sold for cash, how much on credit and how much he has collected from his accounts, and these facts can only be ascertained by a proper system of bookkeeping.

It is not at all necessary that the system should be an elaborate one in which a great many books are used, but it is necessary that whoever keeps the books should understand thoroughly the system on which he is working.

It is always better in business to be practical rather than theoretical, therefore any one who has not had experience in a good office should adopt some simple system that he is likely to be able to master, in place of trying some intricate system which may be very nice in theory, but not so easily carried out in practice.

Some very pretty theoretical bookkeeping is taught in our high schools and commercial colleges, but it is to be feared that a large number of pupils trained at these institutions get into a rut which they cannot get out of, and can see nothing good in any variation from the system they have been taught.

The high school or commercial college may possibly lay the foundation, but common sense must raise the structure on that foundation, and any one who in business sticks rigidly to the formula acquired at these institutions has wasted his time in studying bookkeeping. Different businesses require different variations in the details, the main thing to be attained, whether the books are kept by double or single entry, being the keeping of an accurate record of all the transactions connected with the business, so that a statement can be made up from the books at any time which will show the loss in the event of a fire occurring. If books are kept in such a shape that a statement of this kind can be made up without much difficulty, there is nothing radically wrong in the bookkeeping. But how many country merchants are there who keep their books in such order? Very few indeed, and to this cause may be attributed many of the failures in business, because, where the books are badly kept and irregularly posted up it is impossible for any man to know correctly how he stands.

Accountants who have had opportunities of examining the books of some of the country storekeepers assert that there are cash books which have come under their notice that contain nothing more than a record in pencil of the daily cash receipts, no entries being made of disbursements in the same book, but occasionally a memorandum in pencil in the margin of a bill book showing that a note has been paid or part paid and part renewed. How any man could ever hope to balance his cash under such a system is more than the accountant can tell, and such cases are not isolated but numerous.

Some even do not keep a record of their receipts or anything that has the appearance of a cash book, and for cash book and ledger can show a long wire with a hook on the end and a knot on the other hanging by the hook on a nail on the wall, on which is filed invoices, bills of lading, etc., dog-eared and well covered with dust and fly spots. How this kind of bookkeepers ever got into business and obtained a line of credit is a mystery!

If a merchant has to keep his own books or employ a clerk to do so who is not an expert, the system of bookkeeping should be as simple as is consistent with efficiency. Whether the books are kept on the double or single entry principle all the books that are really necessary for an ordinary retail business are a cash book, day book, ledger, and bill book, except where the business is large enough to warrant the employment of several clerks and the use of counter check books, when another book should be kept in which should be entered every night in columns headed with the numbers of the different salesmen the amount of each sale for cash or credit, then the cash columns when added up should balance with the cash receipts for the day.

A cash book badly kept and irregularly posted is a source of endless trouble to any business man. An accurate result should be kept in the cash book of every dollar received and paid out. The daily cash sales should be entered every night at the close of the day's business in a separate column from the cash received from other sources, so that the merchant may know, by adding up the cash sales column every week or every month, how his business compares with previous weeks or months, and the other column will show how his accounts are being paid, then the two columns added together can be posted in one sum into the cash account in the ledger. The plan of mixing the cash sales, with the cash received on account and from other sources, is more common than otherwise among retail merchants, and such plan not only gives a man an erroneous idea of the progress of his business, but in the event of a fire (which is liable to occur to any one) it necessitates the separating of all the items in the cash book, and classifying them under their proper headings—in fact the making of a new cash book—before he can prove to the satisfaction of the insurance adjusters, the amount of the loss sustained.

When a bank account is kept it is a common custom among merchants to charge the bank with each deposit and credit each cheque given for money withdrawn. This is unnecessary work and makes the amount of cash handled appear very much larger than it really is. The cash in the bank should be treated as cash on hand, for it is simply in the bank for safe keeping and the bank pass book, which may be verified by memoranda kept in the margin of the cheque book, will show the balance in the bank at any time, whereas when the amounts deposited in the bank arecharged to the bank they appear as so much money paid out of the business and in balancing the cash book the amount in the bank is not shown as so much available cash on hand. All monies paid out should be charged at once in the cash book to the accounts on which they are paid. A great many merchants have the habit of making a memo on a slip of paper and putting it in the till to save time. This habit is liable to lead to errors for these slips are sometimes mislaid or lost altogether, and no time is saved; if the cash book is kept handy the entries can be made as quickly in it as on slips of paper, and it has at some time to be made in the cash book, so time is actually wasted.

All the entries in the cash book should be posted regularly into the ledger every week, or at the latest every month. The old-fashioned custom of journalizing everything before posting into the ledger is more ornamental than useful.

ASSOCIATION DOINGS.

TORONTO RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

At the last regular meeting of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association, held on Monday evening in the association's rooms in Richmond Hall, the following were present: President Barron (in the chair) and Messrs. Gibson, Thackray, Sykes, Tolchard, White, Binnie, Booth, Sinclair, Clarke, McCulloch, Mills, Saunders, Johnson, Scully, Williamson.

The meeting was called to order at 9.20 p.m., or one hour and twenty minutes behind time, the last man necessary to form a quorum not having arrived before that time. It is unfortunate that members have got into the habit of disregarding the rule that the meetings are to open at 8 p.m. sharp. Valuable time would be saved, and more business would be overtaken if all would be strictly punctual.

The minutes of last meeting were read, and upon the motion of Mr. Clarke, seconded by Mr. Booth, were confirmed.

The roll call found the treasurer and one member of the executive committee absent.

ASSOCIATIONS FORMING OUTSIDE.

Communications asking for copies of by-laws and for other information that could be of use to grocers considering the question of forming an association were read from the following: Mr. M. McIlhargey, Stratford, who referred approvingly to the idea of a convention which he had learned of through THE GROCER'S report of the Association's last meeting; Mr. W. W. Coulter, St. Thomas; Mr. V. Cornell, Petrolea; Mr. Robt. Rolston, Dunnville; Mr. James Scott, Woodstock, who also asked if an association could be carried on as a section of the board of trade, as a means of avoiding the suspicion of having combined. These letters were received, having been answered by the secretary, who complied with the requests to forward information, etc., in every case.

OTHER COMMUNICATIONS.

Mr. E. Sutton, the secretary of the London Retail Grocers' Association, wrote, to say that his association had passed a resolution requiring further information in the matter of the adoption of a rule to buy the granulated sugar of the St. Lawrence refinery only. They wanted to know why this refinery was the one favored, and if it had made any special offer. This letter, having been also answered by the secretary, was received.

A letter from the Toronto Commercial Travelers' Association was read, wherein were enclosed tickets for the president, vice-president and secretary, along with an invitation to the officers and members generally to attend the travelers' annual excursion on the 22nd inst. A challenge to the Grocers to make up a team to meet nine of the Travelers in a game of baseball at Niagara Falls, N.Y., was included in the letter. The secretary had acknowledged the receipt of the tickets, and upon the motion of Mr. Booth, seconded by Mr. McCulloch, the invitation and the challenge were accepted, ex-President Mills being named in the same motion captain of the team to be sent by the grocers.

An invitation was also received and accepted to attend the Hamilton Grocers' picnic on the 15th at Oakville.

The following communication was laid over for consideration among the convention topics:

Windsor, Ont., June 29, 1891.

JOHN F. THACKRAY, ESQ., Toronto, Ont.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have the pleasure to inform you that an association has been formed as above, and I am instructed to acknowledge receipt of yours of May 22nd last to our Mr. Smith and thank you for your kind offer for to give any information in your power.

About the first thing we find to do is to take steps to remedy the unmitigated evil of peddling from door to door by itinarent vendors, the articles of tea, spices and baking powder.

We see that your city council has been trying to do something in the matter, accounts of it appearing in the CANADIAN GROCER. We have consulted our Mayor, who is a lawyer and we find that although we have a by-law exacting a license of 200 dollars per annum from hawkers of tea, dry goods and jewelery, the same is ultra bires owing to a clause in the Ontario Statutes Municipal Act, which protects them and we cannot get a conviction for an infraction of the by-law.

I have written to London and Chatham associations on the subject and it is suggested that united action on the part of our trade in the province is the only way to secure such legislation as we all feel we are entitled to in this matter.

Will you kindly bring this matter before your association for their consideration and let us know what you are doing in Toronto about it as the reports seem to conflict with each other.

We are just getting down to work nicely. Chatham is about three months old; of course we all look up to you somewhat as the oldest organization and shall be glad of your advice and counsel from time to time. Will send you copy of our constitution as soon as I get them from printer.

The enclosed papers will show you how we propose to work our delinquent list. I am, dear sirs, yours etc.,

B. G. DAVIS,
Market Clerk, (Secretary).

The following communication was also received:

No. 6 Wellington St. W.,
TORONTO, 10th June, 1891.

To the Secretary,
The Retail Grocers' Association, Toronto.

DEAR SIR,—We beg to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 9th inst., conveying to us the thanks of your association for the editorial entitled False Brands on Pickles, which we published in a recent number of our journal, THE CANADIAN GROCER. We esteem highly the commendation and encouragement which the generous resolution of your influential body extends to us, and assure you that our efforts to deserve and retain your confidence, will be as earnest in the future as they have been in the past. We thank you for the honor your association has done us in the public and unstinted expression of its thanks that we have received.

We are, dear sir,
Yours faithfully,
The J. B. MCLEAN Publishing Co. (Ltd.)

THE PIC-NIC.

Mr. Mills reported for the pic-nic committee that they had selected Victoria Park as the place to hold the pic-nic and had fixed on Wednesday the 29th inst. as the day. Contributions in cash amounting to $212, and a large quantity of goods had been subscribed and in part already received from the wholesale trade and manufacturers. The terms made with the Victoria Park people were very favorable. Two boats would run, the first trip beginning at 10:30 a. m. if desired, the next at 1 p. m., with a trip at intervals of 35 minutes after that.

PEDLARS' LICENSES.

Mr. Mills reported for the Pedlars' Committee that he had found it impossible to get it together, though the pedlars had in the interval since last meeting been very active to have the fees reduced. A notice of motion had been made at the last meeting of the City Council, wherein the alderman who made it proposed to make the organizations governing pedlars more stringent, but his notice was declared out of order and the whole matter was referred back to the Markets and License Committee. Mr. Mills had gone to the City Hall to be present at a meeting of that Committee and found the chamber in which it sat thronged by pedlars. He was advised not to attempt to put in the case for the grocers then, as any representations he would make would be overwhelmed by the pedlars present, and his cause would be injured rather than advanced. The Markets and License Committee, however, had put off the matter till fall, when, he was convinced, there would be a concession made to the pedlars unless the trade bestirred themselves most actively. The streets would be free to the pedlars soon if there was not less lethargy on the part of the grocers of the city.

RETAIL SUGAR PRICES.

Mr. Gibson said that a grand opportunity had been allowed to pass unimproved by the grocery trade of this city when the duty was removed off sugar. A time had come and apparently gone when the trade might have turned over a new leaf in their sugar dealings, when they might take to a course of fair profits. But they chose to cut more extravagantly rather than not cut at all. This association and the retail trade had long been fighting the guild, but they had to consider the graver fight of one retailer with another, which certain members of this association, whom he was sorry not to see present, forced upon those who wished to pursue a policy of fair prices. He himself had been put in an awkward position by these very members. He had taken hold with a will and pushed forward, movements which these men urged against the guild, and he found that the concessions which he and other genuine friends of the association had been the means of securing from the guild, were used by certain members of this association to cut the throats commercially of their fellow members. Those members wanted the duty off sugar. They got it. But they seem to have no regard for the real interests of the trade. They began immediately upon the removal of the duty to sell 20 lbs. of granulated sugar for $1. Was it for such objects or for such men that this association existed? They kept up a dog-in-the-manger attitude. They were unfit to do business on business principles. They cannot meet rivals on fair ground and succeed. He wished sincerely that the persons meant were only present. What he recommended as the best course with a neighboring price-cutter was to catch him in his own trap. If one of these men put out a card quoting sugar 20lbs. for a dollar, you get out one right away, and prevent him having the benefit of special advertising which such a card aims to secure. These men had no nerve. They could be cured in no time by an energetic, aggressive competitor who would lie up close alongside of them and fight them with their own weapons. He did not believe in a combine, but did believe that every article should bear its own proportion of profits. The day had gone by when you could sell one thing at a loss and make up for it by an exorbitant profit on another. Every commodity had to show a solvent position in itself or there would be a standstill reached soon by the whole business it belonged to. He wished his fellow-members would consider the question of sugar prices carefully, and be ready to give some practicable schemes for the solution of the matter at the next meeting. In the meantime the solution he advocated he thought ought to be tried. He had tried it and it had worked well. He had promptly followed when his competitor quoted 5c. a pound on granulated, and that competitor had to strike his flag very soon and quote sane prices. (Applause).

Mr. Mills belived in the policy that Mr. Gibson recommended and practised. The small grocer need not fear to cope with the large one at this game, as the assemblage of small ones could worry the large one into reasonable courses, and above all could deprive him of his special drawing feature by making the same feature common. The public never expected 20lbs. to the dollar till they were surprised by receiving it. Now the difficulty of getting back to an 18lb. or other rational basis was great.

Mr. Gibson would add to what he said before that every grocer should pay strict and almost exclusive attention to the custom that was really good. Be sharp to those who haggled, who always had the story of lower prices somewhere else. Drive them away rather than yield to them. It is better they should impoverish somebody else.

Mr. White had not heard so much sound sense talked since he had joined the Association. Heretofore the one string harped on night after night was the combine, the Guild. As an association of retailers he had before now expressed his opinion that retail questions ought to be grappled with, and something done to make retail methods more satisfactory. They ought to give more attention to themselves. Certain members were very regular attendants when the anti-combine crusade was going on, their sole study apparently being how to get still lower prices to crowd their fellow retailer. But these members were never here when some remedy was sought for the evils they and their kind did to the trade. He would go in for a fair price, and hope by his example to bring others into the same course.

Mr. Saunders thought the grocers had shown extraordinary stupidity during the last two weeks. They had an excellent opportunity to place the sugar trade on a sound basis but had rejected it.

Mr. Gibson referred to the difficulty of getting good help in grocery stores. The reason was that the salaries paid were wretchedly low, and young men of promise or self-respect would not take to such ill-paying service. And the trade could not afford to pay salaries that would bring in the best class of help, the present ruinous price-cutting making better pay out of the question.

NOTICES OF MOTION.

Mr. Saunders gave notice that he would move at the next meeting that a monthly prize of $10 be given for the best essay on certain trade topics of interest and value to members of the trade, upon subjects to be selected by the Association monthly, in advance, for the months of December, January, February, March and April.

Mr. Gibson gave notice that he would move the following change in the constitution at the next meeting: "That an officer or member of the executive committee who is absent from three consecutive meetings without furnishing satisfactory excuse, be considered to have vacated the position held by him.

Mr. Gibson also gave notice that he would move at next meeting that a Sick Visiting Committee be appointed. He knew of no more useful committee. When brother members were on sick beds who could befriend them by little offices of kindness better than their fellow grocers? If stock had to be bought to keep the store running, if work or books had to be supervised, none could do it so well as a friendly member of the trade. He cited an instance where great service could have been done and where the consequences of a fellow member's sickness could have been greatly mitigated by such a committee. A general murmur of acquiescence greeted these words.

The meeting then adjourned.

LONDON RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

A meeting of the Retail Grocers' Association, of London, was held in Sherwood Hall, on the afternoon of the 8th inst., with a good representation of members present. The chairman of the picnic committee reported that they had met with better success than anticipated with regard to securing donations in cash and goods as prizes for the picnic. The thanks of this association were then tendered those who have contributed so liberally and willingly toward the picnic fund. The date of picnic on motion was changed from the 22nd to the 29th of July. The secretary was ordered to send special invitations to all contributors, and that the public generally be invited through the press to come to the picnic. The programme committee reported that although they had not quite completed the programme, yet they would guarantee a fine afternoon's sport, and that they purpose providing as much amusement as can possibly be given in an afternoon. The thanks of the meeting were tendered to the Western Fair Board and City Council and those controlling the ring and grand stand for granting permission for use and full control of grounds for the day; also to the Street Railway Company for carrying all children under 12 years of age free, when accompanied by their parents. Communications from Windsor, St. Thomas and Toronto associations were received and duly disposed of, and the meeting adjourned.

HAMILTON RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

At the regular meeting of the Retail Grocers' association the committee appointed to confer with George E. Tuckett on the tobacco question reported verbally. Owing to the new tariff, the price of tobacco is likely to be increased and the grocers want Mr. Tuckett to reduce the size of Myrtle Navy plugs so that they can sell at the old price and retain the margin of profit. The committee reported that Mr. Tuckett had promised to consider the committee's representations, but had given them to understand that, whatever he may do in regard to other tobaccos, the size of the plugs must remain as it is.

The association elected these new members: J. E. Selden, D. Sullivan, D. Canott, F. Smith, Mrs. McKeown and D. Sutherland. T. Morrison, of John street, was proposed as a member.

NOTES.

The Montreal grocers have decided to hold their annual pic-nic at Cuthbert's Grove, Berthierville, on Aug 5. The grove is splendidly situated, being immediately adjacent to the St. Lawrence River, with good fishing and boating. A deputation consisting of Messrs. Elliott, and Demers, president and vice-president of the Grocers' Association, accompanied by Mr. Ibbotson, Ont., side Passenger Agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway, visited this place a few days ago and completed the necessary arrangements. Train service, etc., is being looked after by Mr. Wm. F. Egg, district passenger agent of the C. P. R.

Amongst their arrivals of new Japan teas, Messrs. Lucas, Park & Co., Hamilton, are showing samples of one that should commend itself to all buyers as being particularly good value, in fact the "cup quality" is one of the finest brought in this year. We allude to their brand "Under Two Flags." The outside facing is very attractive, being a blending of the Dominion and Japanese Naval Flags, and a prominent position being given to the Maple Leaf.

The Hamilton Retail Grocers' Association got up a very handsome 32-page pamphlet for the ush of those attending the picnic, held at Oakville, on Wednesday. It contained the programme of sports, etc., the rules and regulations governing the awarding of prizes and the names of the committee of management. This information takes up but a small portion of the book. The remainder is filled up with the advertisements of the wholesale trade and manufacturers who wish to help to make the picnic a success.

The employes of Messrs. R. & T. Watson and John Taylor & Co. went to St. Catharines Wednesday morning with about 300 of their friends per steamer Empress of India and held a picnic and a long list of sports and games. They reached St. Catharines about 11 o'clock, and after dinner men representing the two firms engaged in a game of baseball, which was followed by athletic competitions. An excellent string band accompanied the picknickers and dispensed dance music on the way over and coming home in the evening on the Empress. Every one seemed to be delighted with the trip, and this will probably be the inaugural annual picnic of these firms.

The St. Croix Soap Manufacturing Co. of St. Stephen, N. B., manufacturers of Surprise and Sea Foam soaps, are now employing twenty hands at their factory, and have two agents in the Maritime Provinces and four in Western Canada. They are now making arrangements to be represented in Winnipeg or British Columbia so that their trade will eventually embrace the whole of Canada. A number of improvements have been made the past year in the shape of labor saving machinery, so that now the factory is equipped with the latest machinery known in soap manufacturing, and compares favorably with the best equipped American factories. Their output is entirely laundry soap, of which Surprise soap forms the main part. They are now turning out some eight hundred boxes per week, and have in view the adding of another kettle or pan of large size to the factory and still further increasing its capacity. This building is now one hundred feet front with, an average depth of 65 feet, three stories high, with storage building separate. Their output goes largely through the Maritime Provinces, but their Western Canada business viz, Ontario and Quebec, is growing rapidly, so much so that the proposed additions are to be made for this increasing trade. Their product comes in competition with all soap sold in Canada, and the fact that they are making headway against this competition shows the superiority of their good sound business methods, which are simply to give the best article possible and make the price accordingly. There is an increasing demand for purer and better goods all over Canada, and they are trying to fill that demand.—Halifax Critic.

EGG MARKET REPORT.

Tulloch & Co., London, England, send to THE GROCER the following report: During the last few weeks, the market has been heavily stocked with continental descriptions, supplemented also by large domestic supplies. Consequently prices have tended downwards, and at the present time inferior goods are practically a drug in the market. The position for all but the best selected goods is rendered further unfavorable by the very low prices at which other food stuffs are being offered here. In fact, there have been sales made of inferior qualities, as low as 4s. to 4s. 6d. per long hundred, less usual allowance. Under present circumstances, therefore, bearing in mind that there is still some amount of prejudice against Canadian imports, we cannot see, even supposing that shippers can lay the goods down here in a fairly fresh condition, that business could be worked to show any margin.

From investigations we have made we find that undoubtedly the breakages in Canadian shipments have been decidedly in excess of other imported qualities, a fact which we cannot but consider is largely due to the small packages in which these goods are sent over; as, being comparatively light they can be handled by one man, but without that amount of care which is needed to properly protect contents. When packing is adopted in the longer double cases, as suggested by us at an earlier date, it is found that, the extra weight necessitating handling by two or more men, the package is not liable to such rough handling.

We have also noticed this further drawback amongst many shipments coming on this market, viz, that the eggs are more or less tainted by the packing, specially has this been so when packed in paper compartments or shavings. Even when clean dry straw is used, there is always a certain amount of taintedness in the eggs, but it is a peculiar fact that so far, with all experiments that have been made, as regards the former two styles of packing, the taintedness is distinctly more strongly brought out when boiling the eggs, than as regards the latter. It would seem therefore that in the case of the paper and shavings, the odor permeated through the shell of the egg, whereas in the case of straw it did not.

So far we do not consider that the steam lines running to this port have provided sufficient facilities for the transit of these goods to encourage the trade.

It is customary for many of the steamers to call at the mouth of the river to land cattle and thus a delay of often a day or two is occasioned, as the eggs are only delivered at the docks.

As illustrating this delay we believe that recent shipments arriving on this market have been shipped via Liverpool on a through rate, and have been received here it is estimated at least three to four days earlier than they would come to hand by direct steamer to London.

HOW THEY SALTED A FRESH DRUMMER.

Some of these old traveling men who have been on the road so long that they look lonesome when they are not carrying a gripsack, have a good deal of fun with fresh drummers who are out on their first trip. Lately there were several of these missionaries at Delavan trying to convert merchants to the true faith and among them was one from Chicago who needed salting It was his maiden trip, and he was like a new book agent who has learned a piece to speak and was practising it on the people. He was so new that if you touched him you would be liable to get fresh paint on your hands. He was in a store discoursing on the greatness of Chicago, her enterprise etc., and finally spoke of all the charities that all Chicago people were noted for. He said that a true Chicagoan would divide his money and clothes with those in distress. Charley Mott, a Milwaukee Elk, who has traveled some, heard the cheering words, and to him to think is to act. The Chicago young man, in the effort, had removed his overcoat on account of the heat, and the merchant and several citizens, including a man who was canvassing for clothing for the Dokota sufferers, were gazing at the young man in admiration. Charley took the Chicago man's overcoat, with its fur collars and cuffs, and folded it up and wrapped it in a paper, tied a string around it unbeknown to its owner, took a pen and wrote on the package, "For the Dakota sufferers," handed it to the man who was collecting for Dakota and went out to another store. The Chicago man spoke his piece and then looked for his overcoat, which was gone. He turned pale and then howled. Finally the coat was found in the possession of the Dakota collector and he was asked to give it up, but he would not. He said that a chunky-built man that looked like one of these fat little angels, only he had a moustache, had handed him the package and he could'nt give it up. There was a stirring time until Charley Mott could be found. He was discovered and charged with giving away the coat. He admitted that he did, but said he supposed, from the remarks of the Chicago man, that it was his intention to give the coat when he took it off, and he thought it would save time to wrap it up at once. He said talk would never keep anybody warm in Dakota. What they wanted was clothes.

"How do you know," said Charley, "but some fellow in Dakota, about your size, is starving for an overcoat."

The Chicago man said he couldn't spare his coat, but he was willing to do something for the sufferers, and if they would give him back his fur coat he would give five dollars toward the sufferers, and they compromised for that amount, though Charley said that the coat ought to go to Dakota, as it would look well on some farmer out in a blizard driving oxen to water. The insulted Chicago young man has a string tied to his coat now when he takes it off.—Peck's Sun.

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, July 16, 1891.

GROCERIES.

The influence yet in the ascendant in the grocery market is that of small fruits, which favorable weather is bringing into rapid maturity everywhere. Strawberries are succeeded by raspberries, cherries, gooseberries and currants, which crowd upon the housewives of the country in unusually large volume for the opening of the season, as they have come in almost simultaneously. The effect is to keep up the rush for sugar, which goes out as fast as the refineries can get it ready for the market, and would go probably as fast for another week if the producing capacity were one-half greater than it is. Sugar almost monopolizes atttention, so that the business of the week with outside buyers yields little material to comment upon but the sugar trade. Local trade has been very greatly benefited by the incursion of visitors to the city that have come here to attend the National Educational Association's convention, which has added many thousands to the number of Toronto's regular consumers. Canned goods have been bought freely, as has tea, coffee, and other linee, by local retailers.

CANNED GOODS.

The small quantity of stock on the market last week has been further reduced this week, the local demand alone having made a considerable inroad upon supplies. Present appearances indicate that the pack of '90 and the pack of '91 will merely about meet each other, and that no long jagged edges of the former will be overlapped by the latter. Prices are unchanged, but as the stock in some lines is about out, the quotations for present business in such goods are little better than nominal. Tomatoes are firm and will soon be unobtainable at $1.55 to $1.60. Corn is $1.10 to $1.25, and peas are $1.40 to $1.50. Salmon is fairly active at $1.40 to $1.55. The favorable reports of a large catch cannot affect the prices of present stock, as that is apt to be off the market by the time goods prepared from that catch are ready. The business in futures is beginning to receive some attention from the retail trade, who are sending in orders now and then for tomatoes, corn and peas on a basis of $1.10 for choice brands, and $1 to $1.05 for others. The jobbers do not all with equal eagerness undertake these orders, as their ability to fill them at those prices is subject to conditions which have to be specified in the contracts with the packers. With the bargain an absolute one, the jobbers are not all ready to jump at offers at these figures.

COFFEE.

The coffee market is featureless. There has been a moderate demand at steady prices. Rios are 21 to 22½c.

DRIED FRUIT.

The trade in Valencia rasins, particularly in tke poorer grades has been active, 4¾c. being the lowest price at which sales were made. The finest off stalks are held at 6c., though very good go at 5½c. Currants locally quote much the same as they did a week ago, though an advance of ¼ to ⅜c. in the New York market on Monday has made prices here much firmer. The advance in New York was merely a recovery to a normal state of the market, owing to the disappearance of a very large stock that had been brought into the trade by one buyer in the spring at easy prices. This market followed the New York market at that time but tentatively, and prices righted themselves by degrees. Prunes are moving still at 7¾ to 8c. in cases.

NUTS.

There is only the small demand for nuts from the trade which is usual at this season. Stocks and prices are unchanged.

RICE AND SPICES.

Rice is in request and the stock of it on this market is rather light. Aracan remains at 3⅞ to 4c. Spices are steady and featureless.

SUGAR.

The position throughout the interval since last issue has been one of increasing disability on the part of jobbers to keep pace with the demand, the refineries being more than ever unequal to the task of providing sugar as soon as it is wanted. Wholesalers are impatiently waiting for every carload that arrives, and when it does get in it goes but a short way to satisfy the cravings of the demand which the fruit season keeps up among consumers. A hundred barrels a day are but a drop in the bucket. Retailers who send in for 15 barrels have often to be content with one for the moment. The prices have not changed for any but low grade yellows, which are selling as low as 4c., some Woodside yellows having been brought on the market to sell at that figure. Granulated is 5c. in 15 barrel and larger lots, and 5⅛c. in smaller lots. The strong bent of the demand is for granulated, and as the capacity of the refineries is taxed to produce enough of that sort, the price of higher grade yellows is firmer in consequence. Raw sugar advanced in London on Tuesday, and the general situation is one of firmness.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

The demand for syrups is slack. A scarcity of low grade stock is not felt to be much of a drawback, as little of that or any other kind is wanted these days. Molasses is as firm as ever, but in unchanged quotation, and a considerable quantity goes out, the sort of cooking that calls for it in this province being now quite general.

TEAS.

A moderately good business goes on in medium teas, the grades that are in fullest stock. Japans continue to come in, low and medium grades having just begun to arrive, New season's at 19c. is the lowest. Full stocks of low grades will soon be on hand. The want of Young Hysons is not felt so much as before the receipts of popular grades of Japans.

PETROLEUM.

Prices are steady, and the demand is easy. No change has taken place in any of the features of this market.

DRUGS AND CHEMICALS.

The hot weather keeps up the demand for summer drink constituents, for fly poison, disinfectants, etc., but the price of everything is unchanged. Trade generally is rather steady in staple lines.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

Choice dairy tubs are in as eager demand as ever, though the supply of them has been improving. The local market is good, as boarding houses, hotels, restaurants and many private families have more than doubled their demand for the guests come to attend the N. E. A. Convention. This offsets locally the effect of the summer migrations to places of seasonable resort. Good dairy tub brings 14 to 16c., but only strictly prime ever attains to the upper value. There is a scarcity of cooking grades which is now felt very strongly, as the sort of edibles involving the use of such grades in their composition are more generally produced at this season than in others. Creamery butter is not receiving much local attention. One large lot of tubs changed hands at 19c. outside on Monday. Most of the business done is on shipping account, and that is a limited business.

Cheese is still easier. Good May and June stock is weak at 9¼ to 9¾c.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

BEANS—Few are to be had and few are asked for, but the range of prices, $1.55 for common and $1.70 to $1.80 for fine hand picked is unchanged.

DRIED APPLES—Have shrunk into comparative insignificance, in market attention, in the face of the supply of small fruits. They are also in small compass. Quotations remain at 7¾ to 8¼c.

EVAPORATED APPLES—Are not showing much of the interest that keeps up the market in produce. Some inquiry on shipping account is heard from, but it is limited. Stocks are fairly large yet, and prices run from 12 to 13½c.

EGGS—This market is just now furnishing an exhibition of what a slight concentration of the demand upon one point lightly stocked with eggs will do. Supplies needed for households this week were many times larger than the average proportions of the summer demand, and prices here accordingly went up on Monday to 14½c., with 15c. asked and in some cases paid. On Tuesday some holders who had made provision for a supply beforehand were selling at 14c., but most were steady to 14½ to 15c. The market is apparently but in a temporary state and is therefore unsettled at 14 to 15c.

HAY—Is $11 to $11.50 for baled timothy. Supplies are not by any means liberal at these prices.

HIDES—Continue dull at 5c. for No. 1 green and 6¼c. for buffs.

HONEY—Is very dull at 7 to 10c. for strained, and 14 to 16c. for sections.

HOPS—Are steady at 35 to 38c. for '90, and 25c. for choice yearlings.

OATS—Are somewhat quieter and easier at 51c. on track.

ONIONS—Are steady at $4 per sack for Egyptian.

POTATOES—New are the chief sort in stock. They are $3.10 to $3.25 in cars and $3.25 to $3.50 out of store. Old are $1.10 to $1.20 in broken lots, and $1.30 out of store. They are very scarce.

SKINS—Are unchanged at 25c. for pelts, 35c. for lamb skins and 5 to 7c. for calf shins.

STRAW—Is $6 to $8 and quiet.

WOOL—Is flatter than ever at 18 to 19c. for fleeces.

FISH.

The demand is light, stocks are kept down and trade is in a rather dull condition. The hot weather and the fruit supply are unfavorable to early improvement, which is never looked for at this time of year. White fish and salmon trout are unchanged at 6½c. Lake herring are still dull at $1.50 to $1.75. Salmon is in some request at 15 to 16c. The week has been locally a better one than last, for the same reason that it has been better in other lines on the spot.

GREEN FRUIT.

The week's trade has been fairly good in small fruits, but all green fruits except lemons have been in fair demand. The weather has been propitious for the sale of lemonade and lemons have gone off very well. There are no changes in prices of any moment. Messina oranges are $4.50 and about done. Rodis are $6.50 to $7 and scarce. Mediterranean sweets are in good supply at $5 to $5.50. Lemons are $5.50 to $6. Bananas are $1.50 for seconds and $2 for firsts. Pine apples are $2 to $2.50 per doz.

SMALL FRUITS, ETC.

The market is very liberally supplied; the difficulty of getting sugar making the demand rather duller than it was sometime ago. Strawberries are 9 to 12c. per box, and all but done. Raspberries are 11 to 13c.; gooseberries, small, per basket, 60 to 80c.; gooseberries, large, per basket, $1 to $1.25; peaches per crate, $1.75 to $2.25; watermelons, each, 30 to 40c.; cucumbers, per doz. 60c. to $1; cherries, cooking, per basket, 75c. to $1; cherries, eating, per basket, 90 to $1.10; tomatoes, per crate, $1 to $1.25; apples, southern, per bbl. $3.50 to $4.50; currants, red, per basket, $1 to $1.25; currants, black, per basket, $1.50.

PROVISIONS.

The demand has become quite keen and prices are firming in consequence. Outside inquiry is strengthening the position of smoked meats, particularly hams.

BACON.—Long clear is firm at 8 to 8½c. Bellies are 10 to 10½c.; backs 10c.; rolls 8 to 9c., and quite firm.

HAMS—Rule higher, some houses having advaned to 11½ and 12c., but others hold their quotations unchanged at 11 to 11½c. A strong Western inquiry has given tone to prices, and strengtheued the expectation of an early shortage.

LARD—Is firm at an advance, quoting at 10 to 10¼c. The scarcity of cooking butter and the fact that United States pure would cost 11½c. laid down here make prices stiffer.

MESS PORK—is steady at $15.50 to $16 for heavy and $17 for short cut.

SALT.

The trade in salt has been very good this last week. The sales are 2 cars bbls. at $1.20, 1 car sacks at 70c. 1 car dairy $1.25. Smaller quantities re nain at the same price.

DRY GOODS.

Nothing has developed in the dry goods trade to change materially the situation, which is rather hopeful in the outlook than active in the reality.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, July 16 1891.

The grocery market has been fairly active during the week, more especially for sugar, the demand for which has been maintained so that prices now are firmer on granulated, especially the reduction in the price of which is inducing a large call. In the whole matters are very encouraging in connection with the various branches of this business, and will it not for the season of the year more trade would probably be doing.

SUGAR.

There has been a good active trade doing in sugar and granulated especially has come in for a good deal of attention and prices in consequence are firm at 4¾c. and we hear of reported sales at a fraction better than that. Yellows are in good demand at about 4c. No raws are to be had, but there is a good enquiry for them and prospects are good for trade when any stock is on the market.

Syrups are nominal as the refineries are not offering any to speak of, so we do not quote any price in the meantime.

MOLASSES.

Molasses have been quiet with few transactions of importance, the only sale being one round lot at 40c. The market on the whole however, although quiet, is essentially strong.

TEA.

Tea has been fairly active during the week, but business in the aggregate has been small, owing to the fact that offerings are very light here. All new crop Japans arriving are quickly picked up at 18 to 23c. There is no business in blacks to note.

COFFEES.

Coffee is scarce as ever, while the enquiry, especially for Rios and Jamaicas, is active. Sales to arrive of both descriptions have been made at 19½ to 20c. There is no stock on spot in first hands.

RICE.

There is a fair distributive trade in rice at unchanged prices. We quote Patna $4.50 to $5, choice $4.25 to $4.50, standard $3.90, and off grades $3.50 in car lots.

FRUIT.

In dried fruit supplies generally have been well reduced, and as a natural consequence business has been small since our last. Valencia raisins have been steady, and recent cables from Denia state that reports from all districts report a smaller quantity this year than expected. Locally there has been more enquiry for the fruit as there has been for other articles, and we quote prices firm at 3¾ to 4c. Currants are as scarce as ever, in fact there are none on spot, but there have been some sales to arrive a week hence at our quotations, 5¾ to 6c.

In green fruit business is of a steady, seasonable kind. Lemons are easier at $4.50 to $5, and oranges unchanged, $6 to $7.50 per case.

CANNED GOODS.

The feature in the canned goods market has been an absence in tomatoes, and holders are now asking from $1.45 to $1.50. Salmon, quiet, and buyers do not seem anxious despite bullish reports from the coast. Taken on the whole, indications point to good, fair pack this year.

FISH.

This market is in a purely nominal positon at present, and there is not enough business doing to note a quotation for the market in a strictly wholesale way in any line. All descriptions of stock are worked down to a very slim basis, a few new cod are arriving but we hear of nothing in connection with them yet.

HOPS.

Hops are dull and quiet with only an odd jobbing sale now and then as brewers claim to be well supplied and are not taking anything to speak of. About 25c. is the idea for what stock there is, but business is very small.

PROVISIONS.

The provision market has been without feature since our last. We quote prices as follows:—Canadian short cut, per barrel, $16.25 to $16.75; mess pork, western, per barrel $15.00 to $15.50; short cut, western, per brl $16.25 to $16.75; hams, city cured, per pound 10 to 11c.; hams, canvassed, per lb 0 00 to 0 00c.; lard, Canadian, in pails, 8¾ to 9c.; bacon, per pound, 9 to 10c.; lard, com., refined, per lb, 7¾ to 8c.

EGGS.

Export shipments of eggs continue, but local demand in itself is quite sufficient to keep prices steady at 12½ to 13c.

BUTTER.

It is still a matter of a stand off between buyers and seller on creamery, consequently business in a wholesale way is small. Holders want 19c. and buyers can only see a margin at 18½c. The same remarks apply to Western dairy, holders ideas on which are also too high for an export basis.

British Markets.

Having closed out our local business, we are now prepared to give special attention to all lines of

CHEESE.

The market has a steadier feeling, all the June make having passed out of first hands. Operators therefore are not so pessimistic. Recently sufficient business has been done in a quiet way to demonstrate the fact that 8¾c. is the basis for finest colored and 8½c. for finest white. The cable has advanced 6d. and advices from the other side are somewhat more encouraging.

GRAIN.

The grain market is quiet, the only business to note being small movement in oats. The stocks in store compared with those of a week ago show a decrease of 96,361 bushels of wheat, 14,630 bushels of oats, 4,519 bushels of barley and an increase of 730 bushels of corn, 6,498 bushels of peas. Compared with a year ago there is an increase of 262,042 bushels of wheat, 133,792 bushels of peas, 2,379 bushels of oats, and a decrease of 111,122 bushels of corn, 133,792 bushels of peas, 11,407 bushels of barley. We quote: No. 2 hard Manitoba, $1.10; to $1.12; No. 3 do., 99c; No. 2 Northern, $1.01 to $1.03; feed do., 62c. to 65c.; peas, 90c. per 66 pounds in store; 91c. afloat; Manitoba oats, 52½ to 53¼c. Upper Canada do., 55½c. to 56½c. per 34 pounds; corn, 72c. to 75c. duty paid; feed barley, 56 to 58c.; good malting do., 65c. to 67c; rye, 83c. to 84c.

FLOUR.

The flour market is fairly steady and there has been considerable export shipments since our last, in the aggregate 20,000 sacks of hard wheat patents and strong bakers. The stocks in store show an increase of 5,369 barrels over a week ago. We quote:—Patent spring, $5.50; patent winter, $5.25; straight roller, $4.90 to $5.00; extra, $4.60 to $4.70; superfine, $4.00 to $4.25; city strong bakers', $5.25.

ST. JOHN, N.B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N.B., July 15, 1891.

We do not notice any material change in the grocery market since our last. The wholesale houses all have been fairly busy. Sugar is still the leading staple, and the activity of it seems to have increased the sales in other lines.

FLOUR—Though there has been a steady demand for breadstuffs in a jobbing way buyers are holding off and talk of lower prices, and we have heard of slight concessions being given to make sales. Manitoba patents are selling at $6.10 to $6.25, Ontario high grades $5.65 to $5.70, medium patent $5.35 to $5.45.

CORN MEAL—The market remains unchanged and the demand limited to present requirements. Stocks are being gradually reduced, while $3.35 to $3.45 is the present jobbing price.

SUGAR—The past week a gradual increase in the price of refined sugars has been noted, and grades which then could be bought for 3⅝c. are now selling at 3⅞ to 4c. The demand still keeps up, and present prices are: Granulated, 4⅛ to 4¼c.; yellows, 3.90 to 4⅜c.

BUTTER—Is still coming in freely, and prices have not altered since our last.

EGGS—Have come in quite freely the past week and a gradual lowering of the price has been the result. They are now selling at 13 to 13½c.

PROVISIONS—We have had a quiet trade in all kinds of smoked meats as the market has been overstocked and holders are offering at considerably lower prices than usual to affect sales with a poor result. The direct cause is unscrupulous packers allowing their salesmen to sell all they could to jobbers and then going to the retailers and filling them up as well. Clear mess pork is selling at $16.50 to $17. Beef $15.25 to $15.50.

FISH—The arrival last week of several cargoes of cod and pollock broke the price for those kinds, somewhere near $3.50 being paid for mediums and $4.10 for large. Since then the price has stiffened up some and $3.75 for mediums and $4.25 to $4.30 for large cod has been paid. Pollock $1.60 to $1.75. Pickled fish are coming in in very small quantities and are selling at good prices.

We would ask our subscribers to take notice that W. J. Weatherley is no longer in our employ. He, therefore, has no authority to collect or transact any business whatever for this journal.

The commanding officer of the British war ships in Newfoundland waters has issued an order closing 58 lobster factories along the French coast, which, it is alleged are running in violation of the modus vivendi. Over a thousand fisherman and others are thrown out of employment by this action and there is much indignation among the residents of the French coast.

A Moncton N. B. merchant opening a tea chest the other day found it filled with a white substance in pieces about the size of tea, but otherwise totally unlike it. In the bottom of the chest was a sandal made of grass, woven together and tied with grass thongs, several small pieces of red clay, such as is used in making statutes. The material has been sent to St. John for analysis.

OWNED BY JOBBERS.

About a year ago we called the attention of the retail trade to the fact that a good many of them were laboring under a serious disadvantage with their competitors owing to their dependence upon the jobbing trade for support, they being, indeed, almost literally slaves of the jobbers. This state of affairs, which still exists, is not the fault of the wholesalers, who would rather have their customers stand alone and meet their obligations promptly, but is due to the circumstance that many retailers begin business with insufficient capital. Lack of cash is not an insuperable obstacle to the building up of a successful retail business, provided sufficient energy is put into the experiment, but a respectable percentage of small dealers in this country do not seem able to overcome it, and remain for years upon the very verge of failure. It is from this class of dealers that come the complaint of the unprofitableness of the grocery business—a complaint that is discovered to be founded upon a very unsubstantial basis when one has an opportunity to converse with a retailer possessing experience and ample financial resources, such a one, for instance, as a grocer from a thriving interior town of this State whom we met the other day, and who said in answer to a question : "Business is fair—no 'boom,' of course ; but the grocers in our town are making money, as every grocer should who starts right and uses judgment. Of course a retailer must know how to buy and when to buy, and he must have the necessary capital to enable him to get goods at bottom prices, to take advantage of bargains, &c. If a dealer possessing a knowledge of his business and adequate capital, fails to make money, it must be because he neglects his business. I know of retailers, however," said the grocer, "who have hard work to make both ends meet, because they are always in debt; having started in debt they never have been able to catch up with their liabilities, and are practically owned by some jobbing house with whom they are compelled to trade, but who some day will be forced to close them out."

The exercise of self-denial, economy and industry would soon enable nine out of ten of the retailers who are thus hovering on the brink of failure, and who retain the nominal control of their businesses by sufferance of the jobbers, to pay off their debts and assume an independent attitude. They would then be able to accept the discounts on certain goods, to take advantage of a bargain whenever the opportunity occurred, to buy at rock bottom prices in every case, and, indeed, to make money in numerous ways, whereas now they make but a bare living.—Merchants' Review.

WHAT IS THE REASON ?

Let any one walk through the streets of his city and see the men that have been in business for years. He will find some that started with only a limited capital and have advanced from year to year until they have gained a good competency. He will find others are just about where they were when they started years ago. They have managed to scrape out a living, and that has been all.

Now, in cases like the two above mentioned ones, there must be some cause or reason why the one has advanced and the other has failed or remains just where he was when he started in business. We do not believe we have the solution, because many causes enter into the business life of a man. We do not believe we can tell the reason why many do not succeed.

Do you know the character of the goods you sell? It's not a nonsensical question by any means. Visit the merchants stores and convince yourself. Here is a man that has goods upon his shelves that have become shop-worn. He can't sell them, let alone give them away. Here is a man that hasn't any. Now, there is a difference between these two buyers, and what is it?

A man goes to his tailor and finds that the clothes he has been buying don't wear well. He changes tailors, and finds that his clothes wear much longer and better. Why is it? Was the first man a good judge in buying cloth, or was the second one a good judge?

Then, again, do you know what it costs you to do business? In other words, what per cent of your profits must be deducted for expenses? How many of you ever sat down and figured up all your expenses, taking into account breakage, loss by waste, as well as loss by over-weight and over-measure? Do it once and see what margin you have left.

The successful business man is the one that has a sharp lookout to purchase the best goods in the cheapest markets. He knows to almost a dollar what it costs him to sell his goods. He has few, if any, to see through bad debts, because he knows who to give credit to and who to refuse. Nothing is too small to escape his attention. If he finds a clerk has a customer that is hard to please, and is taking no interest in selling the customer goods, he takes that customer in hand and lands him. So we could go on and enumerate. Give this subject a little attention, and some day you may thank us for this article.—Merchants' Mail.

The neglect to look after minute details in the factory is a source of great loss to many producers.

Credit is often too cheap and overbubing far too common. Don't be guilty of the one, and don't abuse the other.

The trader who pays his way must sell at a profit, and cannot afford to cut below others in the same line.

THE BETTER WAY.

The "one-idea men" have made a lasting impression upon the history of the country, hence we are not at all troubled when the Philadelphia Cash Grocer attributes our enthusiasm for the Boston system of selling sugar to "one ideaism." We are perfectly aware that many grocers get a fair profit on sugar without membership in any Association. But we do know that there is not one-tenth the temptation to cut, under associated arrangements, there is under "the devil-take-the-hindmost" system advocated by our contemporary. Its whole basis of argument rests upon the right of grocers to cut prices to any figure they desire, and that being the case isn't it natural to suppose that there will be a very general resort to such practices?

The Cash Grocer now admits that some combinations are beneficial, but never, no never, can a combination be beneficial that regulates the price of a commodity. We claim that it can be and is beneficial, and we base our claim upon facts—upon what has been done in Boston. "We know whereof we affirm." It has been beneficial not alone to dealers but also to consumers. This is easy of proof. Why will our contemporary, which admits that half to three-fourths cent per pound is not an exorbitant profit on sugar, continue to talk about Retail Grocers' Associations "preying upon the people?" It's the old stock argument, but it hasn't any force whatever, because it isn't true. It talks about the independent "stand outers," the "kickers," as possessing all the brains and refusing to enter into a "combination with snails." Let us again reiterate—but we presume it will do no good for our contemporary prefers glittering generalities—let us reiterate the fact that the ablest, the most enterprising, the wealthiest, the most far-sighted grocers are at the head of the Association movement in New England. They are not "snails," as some grocers we wot of would learn to their cost, should they attempt to keep up with them.

"It is perfectly legitimate," says our contemporary, for a grocer to sell at cost, "whether it injures a competitor or his creditors or not." In the sense that legitimate means lawful, that is true. In the sense that legitimate means fair, honorable, above board, it may not be. How do we know that a man sells goods at cost to injure a competitor? How do we know that night follows day? The grocery trade is "as far apart from church, state or school, as the poles, as regards purpose and methods," says the Cash Grocer. We should say that under the system you recommend it would be. Cutting, slashing, selling at cost, whether creditors suffer or not, fierce and bitter competition, a literal warfare year in and year out—not much church, or school, or common sense in that, we admit.

"Every tub should stand upon its own bottom; so every tradesman should rely upon his own individual efforts, without hanging on to the coat tails of others." True. But the man who would try to lift a ton by his own individual efforts, when there were others ready to help him, would be a fool. Individual effort is all right, but it needs the co-operation at times of other effort—wiser and more skilled effort. Harmony is better than discord, peace is better than war, good fellowship is better than hatred—especially when with these comes a good profit (not an exorbitant one) that would not otherwise have been received.

Our contemporary would doubtless revel in the 'independence' that non-associated effort has brought to the Denver grocers and would prefer it to the condition of things that exists in Boston and Minneapolis. The Northwest Trade tells this story of cutting in Denver:

The grocers of our prosperous little neighbor, Denver, are cutting prices so enthusiastically and vigorously, after the energetic manner they do things in Denver, that it has become a serious question as to what line of goods can be safely placed on the market. One grocer cuts on one line, his neighbor follows, and his neighbor's neighbor helps to swell the procession, which is soon joined by every grocer in the city.

That is the legitmate result of the gospel the Cash Grocer preaches. It is the natural outcome of its theory. This is what the Northwest Trade suggests as a remedy—just what we have always maintained to be the "cure all" for these price distempers that occasionally break out to demoralize trade:

"This fool's policy, (no mild or civil terms effectually describe it) suggests to the thoughtful and unaffected observer that, if the Denver grocers would direct their attention hither, they might find exemplary instructions. No city of the size of Denver can well afford to be without an Association, and to secure through its operations the common protection which such combination alone now offers, and it may be added the only protection which retail grocers can attain."—N. E. Grocer.

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER, issued weekly, subscription price $2.00 per year.

WHY Do 75 per cent. of our Canadian Canners buy their labels and other lithographic work from

The Sabiston Litho. & Pub. Co.?

BECAUSE They have the largest corps of skilled Artists in the country.

BECAUSE They have the best machinery.

BECAUSE Their equipment is more complete than any other Litho. house in the country, and

BECAUSE They turn out the most satisfactory work.

This Company occupies 4 flats of the GAZETTE building, in Montreal, equal to a floor space of 35,000 square feet.

The business was commenced a little over 3 years ago by A. Sabiston and from the smallest establishment at that time has grown within the above period to be the largest of its kind in the country. This fact speaks for itself.

Before placing your orders for lithographic work, see what

The Sabiston Litho. & Pub. Co.

can do for you. Address all communications to

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

The common good of the local trade is what associations of grocers are formed to secure in as high a degree as possible. One principle of great value as a means to this end, and one generally neglected by associations of all sorts, is that of self-reform. The ambition to set everything else right is not wanting, and the critical faculty which opens our eyes to the faults of others is more often over-than underworked. A little introspectiveness is as good for associations as for individuals. It is capable of more than is any amount of vigilance exercised for the improvement of other people and institutions. In the fields of religion and morality there are thousands of workers grouped together into special associations for the benefit of other people: to teach those other people to lead godly lives, to put an end to their intemperance, to make thrifty people of themselves. And these benevolent associations very often do not accomplish what they aim at, and they go to pieces, because of conspicuous and objectionable faults among themselves, that destroy their influence for good among others. It must be the same with trade associations: they can be most effective as a means of clearing away obstacles that confront the trade from the outside, if they first give their attention to those on the inside.

* * * *

There is a suggestion in the words, "Physician, heal thyself," that deserves to be pondered by all associations. Attention was called to it at the last meeting of the Toronto Association, and the general sense of the meeting was plainly in favor of applying the principle in one or two matters. The reckless and ruinous competition that members of associations wage with each other in the largest part of their trade—that of sugar selling—is a more mischievous thing than any evil that associations have tried to overcome among non-retailers. It is worse than free peddling rights, it is worse than excessive combine prices among wholesalers, it is worse than the bankrupt stocks evil. These do not tend to impoverish or circumscribe grocers so much as does the excess of sugar competition, and grocers generally are slaves to that irrational and unjustifiable excess. Associations ought to use their influence more than they have done to put a stop to it. The utter foolishness of the practice of selling sugar without a profit was never so well illustrated as it is just now. There is a lack of sugar, it is hard to get enough to keep going, the refiners are far in arrears with their orders. Yet there are retailers selling sugar at prices that make it seem to be a drug on the market. The enormous increase in sugar consumption which the removal of the duty has caused, the instant need for sugar which the abundance of the fruit is causing; these have caused a shortage in the supply, but they cannot check the price cutter. It is time that associations addressed themselves to that work.

* * * *

The Halifax Association made uniform prices on sugar a plank in its platform when the duty was removed. It is true that a mighty hubbub was made. The newspapers of the city published editorials against combines, and columns of interviews and reports that made public opinion appear to be at fever heat were put under startling headings and explosive sub-heads. It is true also that a co-operative store was at once opened, from which sugar was shovelled out at 20 lbs. of granulated for a dollar, as against 17 lbs. agreed on by the Association. And that store found immense sale for its cheap sugar. Something of a panic struck the Association, and some of its members advised the surrender of uniform prices, but so far the resolution embodying their adoption is not repealed, and the struggle goes on. It might be a good idea to have the resolution suspensive in such emergencies, so as to allow of a simultaneous opening of the sluice gates of the supply for the purpose of swamping such co-operative ventures by meeting them with their own prices for one good hot spell. Co-operative stores have not proved a success even when based on more substantial profits than such as are to be made by selling 20 lbs. of granulated sugar for $1 these days.

* * * *

Other indications that the policy of self-reform is to be made more of by the Toronto Association are to be observed in certain notices of motion which are standing until next meeting. These are to provide for the appointing of a substitute to fill any office whose incumbent has been absent from the meetings without sufficient excuse for three consecutive months; to provide for the appointment of a sick visiting committee; and to provide for the giving of prizes for essays upon subjects whose discussion will be of service to the association. These are all purely applications of the self-reforming principle, and as such are gratifying signs of sound progress. No constitution ought to be without some provision for securing the attendance of officers, and no association is earnest enough in pursuit of its object if it does not insist on the duties of officers being sufficiently discharged. It is in need of reform itself if it has not the means of electing substitutes for delinquent officers.

* * * *

A sick visiting committee is an internal want that only needs to be filled to show how great now the disadvantage under which the association lay so long as it did without it. It is of the very essence of the motive which led to organization. That motive was the softening of the asperities of competition, and to establish trade-sympathy in place of trade-antagonism. One of the most brotherly outcomes of such a result is the sick visiting committee, which is not only a medium for the expression of sympathy in misfortune, but also a practical assistant to the man who is lying on the sick bed. The members, being principals in the management of individual business, are the most capable men to lend a hand to the direction of any business whose master-hand is stricken with illness. They know when and what stock needs to be laid in, how to direct help, how to examine the books and see to the general management of the store. They can do much to minimize the loss incidental to sickness. The encouragement of essay writing upon trade topics is a useful function of the association and ought to be developed as much as possible.

MODEL GROCERY STORE.

The accompanying cut gives an interior view of Mr. Robert Barron's grocery store on Yonge Street, Toronto. It will be found full of hints in store arrangement and display, that there are few grocers too advanced in the art of shopkeeping to be able to profit by. Elegance and ingenuity combine in making Mr. Barron's store a model one both from the point of view of taste and from that of convenience. It certainly is an imposing—looking place to step into or even to glance into from one of the open street cars that pass the door. The appearance of the store tells its own story of the methods that rule in the keeping of it. Discipline prevails, and elegance is the product of ceaseless work. The spectacle which this cut exhibits to the eye of the beholder can not be reproduced in practice without a great amount of work, and work that must be kept up. Eternal vigilance is the price of continued beauty of effect as well as the price of liberty.

KEEP THE PEDLARS IN HAND.

The peddling question as it affects the tradesmen of Toronto is by no means settled. Last year after a long and bitter fight, during which the grocers gained inch by inch until they secured a well earned victory, the matter was allowed to rest. But it would appear that the pedlars would not stay down, and quietly prepared to renew the struggle this present summer. They caught the grocers napping, and had their forces been better managed they would have gained their point. The pedlars claim the right to use the streets of this city free of all license, or rather some of them do, for they are by no means a unit upon this question. There are some who are willing to pay double the amount to the city, recognizing that by raising the license they would diminish competition. But the other fellows say, "no, we want the earth, and if possible we are going to have it." The City Council however have laid the matter over until September, and in the meantime the pedlars will pay up. As the license year for peddling commences the 1st of July, three months of the license year will in all probability elapse before the City Council takes it up. That body proposes to hear both sides of the question, and here is the grocers' opportunity. They have now about two months in which to prepare for the struggle. The time is none too long. The tradesmen's forces should be welded together, and every advantage taken of the time given, to be ready when the time comes. The idea of a petition similar to the one of last year is a good one, and it should be backed up by a strong representation of tradesmen at every meeting when the peddling question is taken up. If this is not done there will be failure instead of success. Butchers ann fruit men should be asked to co-operate, and no stone left unturned to settle this question for some time to come. Information from other points should be sought after immediately, and the secretary will be glad to have such placed at his disposal. There are now quite a number of associations throughout the country. Very few of them there are that have not at one time or another asked for and received information from the Toronto Association, and now here is a chance for a little reciprocity. Let each secretary forward to the Toronto body a list of fees charged pedlars in their cities, and make no mistake. In places where no license is charged let him know it, so that he may not be in doubt. Our contemporaries on the other side of the line might also assist in this matter by giving the fees charged in their several cities. If this is done we shall be glad to pass on the information to the Toronto Secretary, who will no doubt be glad to receive it and will use it to the best advantage.

MAKE A PROFIT.

A sharp commercial writer recently said this very pat thing: "The next crime short of highway robbery is monkeying with a business without making any profit." Anyone of sound sense will agree that, if not a crime, it is foolish and disastrous.

There are many things involved in the conduct of a business, which determine its success or failure. Knowledge of the business, executive ability, the employment of competent, help, judicious buying, care in giving credits, fidelity in collecting accounts, skill and enterprise in pushing trade—all these and other factors, besides the amount of capital put in, have a bearing in determining whether the business shall prove profitable or not.

The particular point I have in mind to speak of just now, and one on which profits largely depend, is the price at which goods are sold. At what per cent. above costs are goods sold? In figuring cost are all the items counted which may legitimately be reckoned in? Having fixed a selling price which is a reasonable advance upon cost, is this price strictly and impartially adhered to? These are questions which every merchant should consider vital to his success.

There should be no occasion to speak of the nececsity of sticking to prices, without deviation under any circumstances, but there is. The business world knows, and the worst of it is there are customers who know, that some merchants cut prices. When they do this they not only lose the profit to which they are entitled, but they injure business—their own as well as their neighbors'.

When a customer finds out that he can buy goods under the regular price, he has the merchant at a disadvantage, and will not hesitate to improve his opportunity. Nor does it stop with him, for people delight in boasting to others when they secure a cut in prices. Thus the merchant's own business is demoralized and his competitors, with whom he ought to live in harmony, are justly incensed.

A merchant is just as much entitled to get from customers in the money received for goods a legitimate profit as to get the cost of the goods. The merchant cheats himself who sells goods without profit. It would be a good thing for some merchants, and it would not hurt any, to write out the last two sentences, underscore them in red, and stick them up in their counting rooms, where they will often meet the eye.

Experience has proved that more goods can be sold at good prices firmly maintained than can be sold under the price-cutting policy. The merchants who have achieved fortune and success are those who have made it an invariable rule to make a fair profit on every sale.

A man who charges a good price shows he has confidence in his goods, and the very fact of charging a uniform price impartially to all necessarily begets confidence in the customer that the goods are right and desirable. When a merchant runs down his own goods by letting down the price, the customer may well entertain a suspicion as to their character, and if he is after first-class goods, seeks elsewhere.—Business is business.—Michigan Tradesman.

NEAT PACKAGES.

To tie up a neat package is an art, and requires taste and skill to do it, so as to make it nicely proportioned and well formed. It is a source of great annoyance to shoppers to have a bundle look ragged, with corners not turned in, string on one end with a tendency to break and become loosened, thus exposing its contents. This has happened to many, and they generally bless, in a quiet way, the store or shop that tied the bundle up. To do up a bundle properly requires simply care, order, and practice. Druggists always take time to do up their packages, and hence are proverbial for their orderliness and neatness in this particular. They are trained to the business. Every merchant should see that the packages which go out of his store are done up carefully and properly, and if he is a progressive business man he will generally have his name and advertisement of his goods on the paper plainly exposed to view. Some merchants show great taste in having a special mark or brand on their package paper, so that every one can see from whom the goods were bought. It should be the custom of every enterprising merchant to have his name on every package that goes out of his store. The moment anyone sees these packages they know where the shoppers made their purchases. This affords a good means of advertising, provided the packages are done up by skillful hands.—Exchange.

Restore goods to their proper places as soon after using as possible.

THE E. B. EDDY BRANCH.

Mr. S. A. Weldon is installed as manager of the new branch of the E. B. Eddy Company that has been opened in this city. He is receiving full supplies in all the lines made at the Hull manufactory, and in the large premises at 29 Front St. West, he will have ample warehouse accommodation. Already he has a few carloads of the E. B. Eddy wares in stock, and is in a position to do business on the largest scale. Their matches, woodenware, indurated wares, washboards, manilla, tissue manilla, toilet, news and wrapping papers, sulphite fibre, wood board, wood pulp, etc., will have an emporium here not less important than that at the head office. Supplies can be forwarded with as much despatch and satisfaction to customers as from the head centre at Hull. Mr. Weldon will be found prompt and affable and altogether the kind of man that business men like to meet. Mr. Rowley was up last Friday and Saturday, and will be here from time to time to see how the branch is getting along. Their new price list, which we publish below, will appear in substance in our Prices Current of next week:

Thieves broke into the grocery store of Messrs. Honor & Scott, Walton street, Port Hope, Tuesday night. They forced an entrance through a back window into the cellar, and made their way into the store by prying open a trap door, on which was standing a barrel of sugar. The firm can miss nothing but about $1.50 in small change, which was left in the till. The culprits are supposed to be boys, who, judging from the apt manner they performed this job, are making fair preparations for an extended visit to Kingston.

THE HAMILTON GROCERS' PICNIC.

The Hamilton grocers' had faultless weather for their picnic on the 15th. The temperature was high enough to make the fresh breezes on the lake grateful to the excursionists and the shady grove on land delightful to the pic-nickers.

The first party embarked on the Macassa at 10 o'clock, and the remainder crowded on the Modjeska at 2.15. The grocers were accompanied by their wives and families. Two neat evergreen arches, with mottoes of welcome, erected by the townspeople of Oakville, greeted the visitors.

The pic-nickers broke up into small camps at the grounds, and, clustering round the lunch baskets, proceeded to appease the appetites which an excellent sail upon the lake had given them. The games committee got to work, and, assisted by Ald. Stewart, the long list of contests was soon in full swing. With the exception of the boot race, for boys, everything went off well. In a boot race, the boots of all contestants are piled about the middle of the course, odd boots being tied together and otherwise generally mixed up. The racers run and pick out their boots, lace them up and run back to the finish. Not satisfied with mixing the boots up those in charge of the boots put a quantity of bran and an egg in each boot. In the scramble the eggs were smashed and formed an omelet in each boot into which the little boys stuck their feet, unknowingly, and got themselves into a very bad mess.

The biscuit-eating contest was laughable. The contestants were furnished with four soda biscuits each, which they were to eat without taking a drink of water, and their struggles to get outside of them were very amusing, the smart boys getting most of them down their coat sleeves.

When the judges—George Hunt, G. H. Hunter and John Eustice—called upon the mothers to produce their entries for the baby show no less than fourteen responded, and each chick was of a different type of beauty. Up and down the judges walked, hesitating to say anything until they finally withdrew to draw up a verdict which was sure to please one mother and offend the other thirteen. They had to do it, however, and they decided to please Mrs. Beckman, of Oakville, by saying that her cherub, a bright faced little boy, was the handsomest one of the lot. Mrs. Rolls secured second prize with her baby, and Mrs. Reoston third.

The prize winners in the races and jumping contests are attached :

The retail and wholesale grocers settled a long standing difference on the baseball diamond, while the majority of the pic-nickers were witnessing the racing and jumping. With many of the players it was their initiatory game, and it was understood from the start that no balls would be stopped which gave the fielders any difficulty. To explain the heavy batting of both teams it is necessary to say that the pitching was all underhand and that curves were declared out of order. The retailers proved livelier than their opponents, and won a five innings struggle by 17 runs to 12. The winning team is composed of W. Ballentine, McBride, A. Ballentine, Garson, Searles, Moore, Galvin, Scott and Smith, and the opposing team was made up of M. Wilson, Myles, Gentle, Bews, Wilson, Chilman, Moncur, Casey and Rissman.

The wholesalers defeated the retailers by two straights in the tug of war.

The Thirteenth Band was on the grounds during the afternoon and evening and rendered an excellent programme of dance music. The party returned in two sections, the last load reaching the city at 12 o'clock.

Pickpockets assiduously plied their art when the crowd was embarking on their return passage, and many persons, chiefly ladies, were robbed.

CITY TRAVELLERS' EXCURSION AND PIC-NIC.

On Wednesday at 5 or 6 a. m., at "the breezy call of incense-breathing morn," a large number of people rose from their downy couches, and an hour or so afterwards poured forth from street cars and carriages upon the wharf, about the time that the shrill clarion of a certain steamboat was confounding men's senses by its warning note. It did not escape the notice of these early risers that the sun was shining brightly, that the sky was cloudless, the bosom of the lake unruffled and the weather fresh—too fresh perhaps to be in strict keeping with the retiring natures of the observers, but not fresh enough to jar with their thermal susceptibilities. The day was a glorious one, as well it might be, for that particular day had been bespoken, had been marked out in the calendar weeks before, by the Commercial Travelers' Association of this city, as a day worthy to be the date of their first excursion and picnic. And it entirely adapted itself to the greatness of the occasion. In the dewy shade the robin trilled his lay in sweetest note, and the flowers worn by the ladies and gentlemen made grateful offerings of beauty and perfume to a day of pleasure. All things seemed to chime in with the spirits of the pleasure-seekers. And a goodly company they were. Among them could be seen the grizzled locks of the veteran who had borne the grip through storm and tide for a score of years, alongside of the mantling cheek of him whose first order was in the near past, and whose second was probably in the distant future. All the varieties of type that could be crowded between these two ends of the scale got on the boat, and all agreed in being contributors to the fund of entertainment. They were going to Niagara Falls to gaze on the mighty cataract, and to disport them as gleefully as they might on the romantic banks between which its waters glide. And they were accompanied by their wives, their daughters and their sweethearts, and the innumerable host of kindred comprehended under the general name of friends. And the ladies served as reflectors to all the other charming features of the day, themselves the most charming. The sun shone more brightly because they were along, the birds sang more sweetly, and the memory of the day will on their account be longer cherished. Music, too, with its voluptuous swell gave the soft winds a voice. Marcicano's string band was there and it played long, languishing strains that melted the hearts and animated the heels of the festive company. There was joy on board. The evil spirit of sea-sickness seemed to be even pleased, and few there were who had to go down to the side of the ship with "the return of the swallows."

Great has been the talk for the last ten days as to the result of the base ball match —Travelers vs. Grocers. Friends of both sides became so interested that they were even willing to gamble their last dollar Therefore, when the Falls were reached no time was lost in repairing to the scene of action. Space prevents our going in detail the efforts of each individual player to make more than one run. The Knights of the grip were evidently "not in it" as the score stood 11 to 1 in favor of the retail grocers and one innings to spare. The travelers now claim that half their team were not present. However, that is no excuse, and the grocers hold the fort. The players were as follows :— Travelers—Messrs. Caldwell, (he made the one run for them), Muldrew, J. Park, Eckhardt, Fox, Thompson, Lucas, W. Park and Dimmock ; Grocers—Messrs. Saulter Mulgneen, Stewart, McCleary, Forster, Sykes, Gibs, Campbell and W. F. Britton.

In the evening when "calm stillness and the night become the touches of sweet harmony," Marcicano's band laid itself out to transfix with admiration and render spellbound every human being within bearing who would not dance. So when they got their bowes rosined up and the deck was cleared for action they struck in, and the crowd walked and schottisched and polkaed, and kept things going by the hour, and when the orchestra got tired they asked for more. It was truly a goodly sight. But this was not all, in the cabin a grand concert was in progress. You know the travellers can do anything. They sang there till the boat reached her dock. Besides a number of selections from the Travelers Glee Club, under the leadership of Mr. C. Dimmock, songs were given by Messrs. J. Park, A. H. Lawson, McCann, C. Lucas, F. Morley, C. S. Fairbairn, Spencer, C. A. Caldwell, Bradshaw, F. C. Crean, Jas. Owen, A. M. Gorrie, Henry Wright, (Jock McCraw) C. Rupert. Mr. Geo. Taylor, grocer, Spadina avenue, also gave an excellent song.

Now, among the grocers who saw, heard and enjoyed all these things were noticed the following : Messrs. Barron, Gibson, Thackray, Butcher, Mara, Sykes, Mills, Williamson, Swan, Milligan, Johnston, Saunders, R. Donald, jr., Webb, Dewey. Radcliffe, F. Britton, A. Smith, Anderson, Roberts, and McCulloch.

Among the travelers who seemed everywhere at the same time we saw Messrs. Maxwell, Piper, Fairbairn, Dimmock, Gallow, Bradshaw, Sloan, Owen and Furnival.

The whole day was a success in all respects, and the committe shares with Jupiter Pluvius the honor of making it a success. Only rain could have made a failure of it with so competent a committee, and last and best it was a financial success.

THE MERCHANTS' GREATEST NEED.

There never was a time that could compare with the present in the amount of gratuitous and frequently worthless advice tendered merchants for their guidance in business. Much that is offered is of such a character that any merchant with a vein of common sense in his make-up would waste his time in devoting it to the reading of such articles.

In a general sense advice is a good thing for a merchant to receive, providing he has the time to think it over and carefully consider the supposed merits of the argument. But to the hustling, energetic merchant, the one who is busily employed with working out his own advice through the practical workings of his business, there is no necessity of his wasting valuable time in considering the smaller ethics of the trade. Those things which are of the utmost importance in one's business, gradually unfold themselves to the thinking man no matter what his walk in life.

There is one thing, however, which no amount of thought nor advice can do for a merchant, and that is bring to him reliable information. Reliable information is the keynote to success in any business. It always has been and always will be so. A merchant may be the peer intellectually of any man; may be bright and quick to take advantage of a competitor in his methods of doing business and yet prove a dismal failure through the lack of reliable information. He may be prudent, economical and apparently thrifty yet men of this character are just as prone to split on this rock as those of any other class. Reliable information, backed with only a moderate amount of brains, has been the secret of many a rich man's wealth, and how much more valuable does it become when possessed by an energetic and persistent business man who has the brains to carry out a project or purchase merchandise on the strength of the latest and most accurate information.

The world is full of wealthy men, and it is safe to say that originally ninety per cent secured the basis of their fortune through the possession of reliable information. Opportunity is the link that connects with this essential element and if taken advantage of leads on to the success which every merchant strives for. To keep posted on all the different items which make up ones stock can never come through the process of thinking alone. It requires the facts and conditions which must be gleaned from a point as near the source of supply as possible and it must be constant and accurate. It is self evident that the merchant who is constantly alert and seeking the best information to be obtained regarding the product or products which he offers for sale is the one who will have more to his credit in his bank account than the merchant who relies on the every day talk he receives from other dealers who sell him and make their profits out of him.

The larger dealer has an advantage over the smaller dealer in obtaining this "reliable information" by reason of the fact that he gets closer to the source of supply and even if not able to secure his product direct, yet becomes familiar with all the necessary facts which enables him to buy much closer than he otherwise would. The only means that the smaller dealer has of keeping posted must naturally come through reliable newspapers which have their reporters and competent editors and correspondents who watch each turn of the markets, the condition of growing crops, the financial ability of manufacturers to prevent or demoralize a market, etc., etc. It is to be regretted that there are not more journals which aim to give merchants information, but there are a limited number of good trade journals one of which at least every enterprising dealer should take and carefully read. Reliable information is what is most needed and it may be had at a trivial cost. The possession of it was never so necessary as in this day of close competition, small profits and brainy business men.—Chicago Grocer.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BUSINESS MAN.

It is a good plan for every business man to use printed stationery in carrying on his correspondence, no matter how large or how small may be his trade Most merchants do this, but now and then a letter is received having nothing but the chirography of the writer to indicate his name and place of business. When name and address are written plainly, which is done in the great majority of cases, they can of course, be readily deciphered without the supplementary work of the printer, but the fact will not be disputed that the writing of many persons cannot always be read easily by those unfamiliar with it. Where words in the body of a letter are ambiguous, they can usually be deciphered without great difficulty by examining them in relation to the context, but such a key is not obtainable in an attempt to read the name. A printed note head makes the name plain, looks business-like, and the cost is insignificant in proportion to the benefit derived. This is a cheap mode of advertising that dealers should not neglect to improve.

Enterprising business houses make it a point to preserve all correspondence. Letters written are copied in books provided for that purpose, while communications received are filed systematically for future reference in case they should be wanted. The wisdom and necessity of this policy are exemplified every day. The memory of a correspondent is at fault. He feels sure that the terms of a contract have not been complied with, that he ordered something different to what he received. A reference to his letter corrects the defect in his memory and convinces him of his error. If the letter has been destroyed it may be impossible to make a patron believe that he is mistaken, and the careless business man may be compelled to choose between the unpleasant alternative of losing the trade of a good customer or yielding to an unjust demand. Few letters may ever be required for perusal after they have been answered, but when a man does want an old letter, he wants it. So it pays to give close and exact attention to the preserving and filing correspondence.—Ex.

TOO MUCH ATTENTION TO DETAILS.

In conducting a retail grocery business successfully it is obvious that details must not be overlooked, owing to the circumstance that the business is largely made up of details, yet it will not pay a dealer to give too much attention to them, otherwise he may have no time to attend to more important matters, such as the careful buying of goods, laying plans for extending trade through advertising, &c., not to mention the most essential of all the general supervision of the business. The dealer beginning business on a small capital must necessarily give nearly as much attention to the little things as to larger matters, simply because he cannot afford a large staff of clerks, but the time may come, and must come if his efforts are rewarded by success, when it will be the wisest plan to add to the number of clerks and leave many details entirely to them, while the proprietor supervises things generally. A good many dealers from force of habit continue to fuss with minor matters which assistants can attend to as well if not better, long after their business has reached a stage where a different system is required. Others, again, either because they do not pay their clerks sufficient or do not treat them well, or have not given sufficient attention to the hiring of the assistants, find it difficult to escape an annoying degree of attention to details, from the fact that the clerks are ignorant, stupid or careless, and incompetent to perform very trivial tasks unless constantly watched and instructed by the employer. Whatever be the cause of the compulsory employment of the dealer at tasks which could be as well performed by those whose time is far less valuable, the result is the same—the important, the absolutely essential matters are partly neglected owing to the physical impossibility of doing two or three things at once, and the dealer never has a moment he can call his own, save at meals or when the store is closed and he can draw a sigh of thankfulness and relief.

No matter how much money a retail grocer is making, no matter how quickly the dollars may be pouring in, we hold that he has not yet mastered his business, if he has not succeeded in establishing a system by which only a general supervision of the business is required from him while petty details are left to the clerks who are hired to attend to them.

One of the most successful retail grocers within the metropolitan district conducts a very large business, yielding an enormous revenue, yet never "turns a hair," as the saying is. Serene and imperturbable, yet keeping a grasp upon the whole business which never relaxes, he can be seen at nearly any hour of the buisness day in one of his several establishments, never interfering with the clerks and unknown personally to many of his customers, but the system is so well arranged that the machine runs smoothly whether he is present or absent. Contrast the business methods of this dealer with those of many other retailers, and the wisdom of the former will appear at a glance.—Merchants, Review.

A PRIZE ESSAY.

Our "over the water" contemporaries contain the result of a $500 prize essay competition recently participated in by grocery clerks in England. The subject of the essay was: "How to Commence and Carry on a Retail Grocery and Provision Business with a Capital of $500, Buying and Selling for Cash." We make extracts from the prize essay, as doubtless there are pointers therein of value to grocers and clerks hereabouts:—

The universal ambition of the shop assistant is, or at least ought to be, to become his own master; at any rate, such is my ambition, if happily I were possessed of the necessary capital. Say I had $500 at my disposal and supposing that amount to be the limit of my capital, I would select a shop in a good medium-class neighborhood, and in a good thoroughfare. My object in choosing a thoroughfare would of course be to be in a position to command a good cash trade. I would take care that my rent did not exceed $175 per annum, and of course taxes, which would make the shop cost me altogether about $225. I would, if possible, secure a corner shop, as in my opinion a corner situation is always the most commanding for business.

Having secured my shop in the desired locality, which I presume is already fitted as far as fixtures are concerned—by fast fixtures I mean counter, shelving, window fixtures, and rails on which to hang provisions, my intention being to open a general grocery and provision business—about a week previous to my opening I would have 5,000 handbills printed, and by means of these would make my intention as widely known in the neighborhood as possible, taking care to impress upon the people that my leading feature would be quality combined, of course with reasonable prices. The 5,000 handbills mentioned above would be my first item of expenditure. Next I would proceed to purchase my loose trade utensils. I may say then I would endeavor to make my shop as attractive as possible; at the same time I would endeavor to be economical. Now I am assuming that what I have termed "fast fixtures" will include a row of drawers the whole length of the grocery side, say about fourteen in number; these I would use for spices and small sundries.

As to my utensils, I would purchase twelve cannisters, a coffee canister, syrup can, grocer scale, provision scale, and a butter scale. I would, of course, have a complete set of weights to each scale. I would also purchase a weighing machine, a coffee mill, and a bacon tank. The weighing machine and coffee mill for a beginning, with a capital of $500, may at first seem heavy items of expenditure, but I would consider both necessary in order to carry on a business successfully. I would consider the weighing machine neccessary inasmuch as it would enable me to weigh my goods as I would receive them from the different wholesale firms with which I would do business. The coffee mill I would consider necessary as I could grind my coffee daily, and this I would consider beneficial to my trade, fresh ground coffee always being best. As to the bacon tank, I would always buy my provisions in salt, which I consider to my advantage, as I would save an extra profit wholesale firms might charge for washing and drying. I would have the satisfaction of knowing that I had paid no more than the actual cost, and thus I would add a little to the profit on my provisions.

The aforementioned articles would cover the principal parts of my expenditure as far as my utensils would be concerned. I would of course yet require a number of scoops, butter paddles, paddle mug, knife, saw, steel, a set of butter tickets, and a number of provision tickets and window bills. I would also require about three and a half dozen bacon hooks, a pole, watering can, brush and step ladder. I would purchase a set of books which I would consider necessary to carry on my business in a business-like system; these would include a diary, cash book, journal and trade ledger, which I would keep on the double entry principle.

All that I would now require would be gas-fittings, and I would see that these were arranged in such a style that I would have a well lighted shop. Thus fixtures would be complete, and I would at once proceed to buy my stock. I would pay "cash," by that I mean I would pay for every article at the time of purchase.

It would not be my intention to go in for a cheap, or what is generally termed a "cutting" trade; being in a medium-class neighborhood, I would make it a point to sell a good article even if it should cost me a little more. Quality would be first consideration; at the same time I would always endeavor to sell at a reasonable price, and by doing that, by selling at a reasonable price, I would gain the confidence of my customers, and would undoubtedly build up a business.

My "main line" articles would be provisions, butter, tea and sugar. I would of course buy a few eggs, and would not forget to buy all the various articles I would class as sundries, such as jams, tin goods, biscuits, pickles, sauce, soap, dry soap, washing soda, blue, black lead, blacking, rice, tapioca, sago, starch, ground rice, corn flour, pepper, mustard, caraway seeds, cocoas, coffee, chicory, fruits, candied peel, almonds, nutmegs, cloves, ground ginger, arrow-root, etc., etc.

As to my profit, I would expect my provisions to yield 10 per cent, butter and margarine 17½ per cent, tea 20 per cent, sugar 7½ per cent, sundries 7½ per cent.

THE GROCERY CLERK QUESTION.

Elisha Winter, in the Grocers' Monthly Review says : The question of skilled labor is the question of the hour in all walks in life. In the distrubution of food supplies to the consumer, it deserves much more attention than it has ever yet received. A movement among the clerks of New York in the direction of their mutual educational advancement has been making steady and most encouraging progress for the past few months. They have commenced a series of instuctive debates on topics connected with the practical duties of a clerk in the store.

Recently, at the German Branch Y. M. C. A. 142 Second Avenue, corner 9th Street, New York the topic of debate was one which touched on the very important and recent developement of trade away from the grocer.

The present tendency of the ladies to spend much of their spare time in the dry goods stores and as little as possible, or none at all, in the grocery store, is gradually concentrating the grocery trade in those dry goods stores. There are dry goods stores in New York to-day that take a new article of food product and introduce it quicker than fifty grocers could. To compete against this growing trade tendency much can be done by the clerk in the store, because the only time you can reach most of these ladies is when they come out to buy their fruits and vegetables, and the stores which present the most attractive appearance, keep the best goods and employ the best clerks are bound to secure the best trade. As was stated by one of the clerks debating the question, a large proportion of the population move about as often as the grocers do. Opinions differ as to how often that is, but it is too often for the good of either. This new transcient population is invariably attracted to the best looking stores, or if the clerk is out soliciting orders, the trade is secured by the clerk offering the best goods for the least money. Where one clerk meets the others on price and quality, then the most polite, tidy and intelligent clerk naturally secures the preponderance. It is not difficult for one grocer to meet another on price and quality of goods, but when this question of skilled labor comes in, then most grocers seem incapable of giving it intelligent treatment or even consideration.

After years of observation of the development of the grocer movement, we wonder at their neglect of this important factor in the success of their business.

Some two years ago an attempt was made to establish a system of introducing food specialties in some two hundred grocery stores. In about one hundred stores the clerks were reasonably intelligent, very industrious and attentive to business, so far as they were required to be. But it is just there, in the requirement of the average clerk, that the average grocer breaks down. The standard of trade is too automatic. A good nickle-in-the-slot machine, set up on each corner, would knock most of those clerks out, especially if it sold vegetables by weight, and it would stay longer in one place than the average clerk does. Customers don't more than get to identify a clerk in most stores before he is gone and a strange clerk takes his place. When a grocer has a good clerk, or a good clerk as a good employer, the success of that store is reasonably assured—other things being equal, of course. They generally can be made equal, with ordinary business management.

If this clerk's movement could develope two hundred clerk's who in five years could develope two hundred model stores in this vicinity, they could establish a standard of trade that would be profitable to them, would be a benefit to the community and would drive hundreds of nominal grocers out of business who are now not making any money themselves and not allowing their neighbors to make any.

The best costomers in this city scarcely enter a grocery store, and must be reached by the order clerk. The grocer who can attract a customer to his store, and hold that customer's confidence, will hold that customer's trade. It can easily be seen that it is therefore important to first have a good order clerk to induce that customer to call, and then a good store clerk to keep the customer calling.

If manufacturers would raise a half million dollars one year and put one thousand good order clerks in one thousand good stores of this city, they could introduce their goods cheaper and quicker than by any other method. Let the manufacturers announce that they would guarantee the integrity, intelligence and industry of that one thousand clerks, as well as the purity of their goods, and they would easily find one thousand good grocers only too glad to get them, and at the end of the year they would realize that it would pay them to keep those good clerks and pay them good wages.

Grocers are to-day paying better wages, but complain that they are not getting better clerks. The only way to settle that is to grade the clerks Commence by either making the term "first clerk" mean something, or else abolish the term. It means nothing to-day. A first clerk in one store becomes a second or third clerk in another store, and vice versa.

If some of the grocer associations would only take hold of this clerk question in dead earnest and give it the "right of way" for one year, they never would allow it again to be neglected, and until it is done, they never can expect to see much permanent good come out of the grocer movement. Just at present there seems to be no direction in which such effort could more advantageously be directed, and grocers should give it the benefit of their most earnest consideration.

No young man can possibly have mistaken his calling who finds in it what the world wants done

GROCERIES.

Trade moves onward upon the line that marked its course last week. The trade in sugar dwarfs that in every other commodity, and takes up so much of the time and attention of wholesalers and retailers that hardly anything else can be got in edgewise. Indeed there would be a greater tax on the time and attention of jobbers to do a sugar business if the sugar could be produced about three times as fast as it is. Canned goods are arousing some interest, though less than they usually do at this time of year. Teas are rather more active, as an opportunity to do a little business in them can be sandwiched in between sugar movements, which are prevented from being continuous because of the backwardness of supplies. Dried fruit is going out fairly well. The general expectation of a good crop infuses trade with a better feeling, and money moves less cautiously in lines out of the grocery trade. The late rains have been very refreshing to the spirits of trade as well as to vegetable life everywhere.

CANNED GOODS.

Spot goods are about exhausted, and there is every probability that there will be none before new stock is well in. Inquiry for new pack peas, tomatoes and corn is becoming more active, though kept in abeyance by the great excitement in sugar. The prospects of the crop, though not yet nearly through the formative period, are still in a very hopeful position, the fine rains and the tempered warmth of the weather being the most favoring conditions the vegetables which constitute the packer's raw material could have. The tenor of reports from all quarters is that a large yield and a full pack are looked for. The signs have encouraged outside retailers to overtures for business in future goods upon a basis of $1.05 to $1.10, the latter for unexceptionable brands, while for others prices are quoting as low as $1. The shading which brings quotations down to this point is not done on first-class goods, as the demand is always trusted to take these off at remunerative prices, and even for future business with all apparent favorable possibilities for a large pack, jobbers are firm for what is No. 1. There are a few new peas in stock but they are not really marketable, the object of packers in hurrying them into stock being obviously to get first on the market. They will require a fortnight or more to make them really merchantable stock. Salmon is not particularly active as a future line these days, and reports from the fisheries do not furnish data for any calculations as to the probable extent of the pack. All prices are firm at unchanged quotations.

The Baltimore people are trying this market with quotations on peaches and other lines, but cannot put prices on a comparative basis with Canadian to make business possible.

Horse Shoe salmon and Clover Leaf salmon will be put up this year in flat as well as in tall tins, the former being preferred in the English market.

Sloan & Crowther expect the first shipment of Clover Leaf lobster in a day or two.

COFFEE.

There is an ample supply of all grades but an active demand is wanting to make business. There is very little trade at prices quoted for some time.

DRIED FRUIT.

Dried fruit is coming to the fare after a temporary spell of neglect, owing solely to the concentration of all trade attention upon sugar. In the intervals when there is no sugar being shipped because no sugar is to be had, dried fruit is selling in considerable volume. Cheapness is giving an edge to the demand in addition to the sharpening effect of the season, which always is a very good one for dried fruit. Prunes were quoted as low as 6¼c. in large lots. They are going out freely. Valencia raisins are unchanged. Good stock is steady at prices ranging from 5¼ to 6c., while grades corresponding to prices as low as 4½c. and upwards are still on the market and selling. Currants are firm at quotations standing a week ago, with a considerable quantity in request.

NUTS.

The trade in nuts is light at prices quoted. There is no change in any line.

RICE AND SPICES.

There is plenty of rice, but there is no fine quality stock. A cargo of Japan is on the way and is expected by the mills to arrive soon. The demand is good and prices are unchanged. In spices business moves along at its usual level of activity.

SUGAR.

The demand for sugar has not slackened, the refineries are turning out stock to the full extent of their capacity, but they are unequal to the task of keeping the demand satisfied day by day. They are said to be working night and day and on Sundays. The St. Lawrence has at last refused to take any more orders except at open prices to be fixed at the time of shipment, which is to be after present orders are filled. The advance orders for granulated are said to be so numerous that they will keep the refineries busy till the end of the month at least. Some of the local jobbers have followed the example of the refinery referred to, and have instructed their travelers to take no further business on present or any quotations for granulated, all orders having to be taken subject to prices ruling at the time of supply. The demand for granulated is made greater not only absolutely but also comparatively to that for yellow. If the same quantity of sugar were wanted, but in the relative proportions of granulated and raw that existed before the removal of the duty, the demand would not be so far beyond the resources of the supply. But the main rush of the demand is for granulated, and as the machinery of the refineries cannot at once be adjusted to the shifted relations of the demand, they are not able to get out enough granulated while they are able to get out yellow in about the volume that is wanted. All the refineries but Redpath's advanced ⅛c. on Friday last on granulated, but they might as well stick to 6⅜c., because they will be unable to produce for some time more than has been bargained for at that figure. The price is unchanged here, quoting 5c. for quantities of 15 barrels and over and 5⅛c. for smaller quantities. Yellows are from 4c. up. There was some talk during the week of asking the Government to suspend temporarily the duty on granulated in order to admit of sufficient importations from the United States to satisfy the demand and save the fruit that is reported to be wasting for lack of sugar. A small arrival of raw, No. 14 Dutch standard, which is duty free, was brought in, but as it simply took the place of yellow, and as there is no famine for yellow, little of it was necessary at present prices.

Eby, Blain & Co. have on the way three car loads of fine Trinidad raw sugar which they will be able to sell at $3.85 to $3.90 per cwt.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

There is very little call for syrups, and stocks are limited, being out of low grades, and not very full in higher ones. Prices are unchanged. Molasses is moving slowly at prices current last week.

TEAS.

Some movement has got started in medium and low grade new-season Japans which are now rather plentiful at prices from 19c. upwards. The want of Young Hysons at suitable prices is more acutely felt than ever. Business in new make Congous goes on slowly as it will be a month before stock can be put on the market. Ningchows and Monings from 10d. to 1s. 6d. have been offering to arrive for some time. New Darjeilings are offering at prices to jobbers ranging from 13d. to 1s. 9d. The quality is good.

PETROLEUM.

The market is quiet and prices stationery at the points held at last week.

The following is the petrolia Advertiser's weekly oil report: Petrolia crude $1.31 per bbl., Oil Springs crude $1.31 per bbl. The above figures are the ruling price this morning, there being really no difference between the Oil Springs and Petrolia prices. The business on 'Change is very dull, there being no excitement whatever, and very few transactions are recorded. The drill keeps at it all over the territory, and many new wells are being struck, which only continue to add to the ever increasing production. As we stated last week a hundred acres of the very best oil producing territory has been placed in our hands for disposal, either for sale outright or for lease. Owing to continued illness of the owner this step has been taken, and will be disposed of on easy terms to the purchaser. Refined yesterday sold at 12½ to 13c., and may be regarded as the market price for the present.

DRUGS AND CHEMICALS.

Not much out of the routine is to be said this week. The cool weather has cast something of a chill over the trade in summer drinks and has therefore adversely affected the sale of the chemical constituents of those drinks. There are no changes in prices.

Advices from England say that the United Alkali Company expect to make a still further advance on prices.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

Throughout the latter part of last week and the early part of the present week there was a want of butter in all grades, and prices felt for the time the stimulating effect of the scarcity. On Wednesday supplies had become again quite liberal, and common butter had begun to accumulate. The position of the finest grades continues unchanged. They are wanted, and the capacity of the market for them will expend with the supply. There is no danger of any excess stock in these grades. Butter suitable for baking is now fairly plentiful, but at prices rather higher than buyers of this class care to pay as a rule. The demand for it is slightly behindhand on this account, as most of the butter was bought in a better state of the market, and is held at prices that tend to check consumption somewhat. For selected dairy tubs a very good demand on export account existed and was quite active at 14c., but this could be got from the home market for the class wanted. Some 400 packages were picked up at prices ranging from 13½ to 14c. Creamery butter is not in strong request. An offer of 18½c. was made for a lot of 300 barrels but it was refused and the lot was disposed of to an eastern buyer at some advance on this price. What tends to make the market slow for creamery tubs is the fact that this year the quality of dairy butter is on the average much higher than it was last year, when the creamery market was better than it now is. The heavy rains of the spring and early summer of '90 produced rank herbage and this yielded butter that lost its freshness and became stale almost as soon as the unwatered grass would.

This year there has been no superabundance of showery weather, and dairy butter that will keep sweet and wholesome-looking for several days is now plentiful. It is also wanted for export. This makes creamery somewhat inactive. Prices are: Choice dairy tubs 14 to 15½c., medium tubs 11½ to 13½c., low grade to common 10 to 11½c., dairy pound rolls 16 to 17c., creamery tubs 19c., creamery pound rolls 21 to 22c.

Cheese has become firmer at 9 to 9½c., the price being based on purchases made before the recent advance, and being liable to go up rather than down.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

BEANS—The market is low in stock, and the demand is slight at $1.80 for choice, and nominal prices down to $1.50 for lower grades which are about out.

DRIED APPLES—Very few are in stock and scarcely any are wanted at 8½ to 9c.

EVAPORATED APPLES—The stock is more than adequate for the demand which is quiet at 13½ to 14c.

EGGS—The market has been unsettled for some time, buyers having conflicting views as to the stability of the situation. It has been unchanged, however, for above a week. The price is 14c. Receipts are fairly liberal but the market seems equal to the absorption of all that come.

HAY—is higher, baled being worth $12 to $12.50, with few receipts. New hay is arriving on the streets to sell at $9, which the farmers prefer to $15 in the winter.

HIDES—are dull and unchanged at 5½c. for weights of 60 lbs. and above, and 5c. for lighter weights. Green are quiet a 6c.

HONEY—The dulness is unbroken at 7 to 10c. for strained and 14 to 16c. for sections.

HOPS—Are quiet and getting into small compass at 35 to 38c. for '90 stock and 25c. for select yearlings. The reports favor the expectation of a good yield and low prices.

POTATOES—There are no old potatoes. New United States potatoes are $2.50 to $2.75 per barrel, and Canadian are $2.75 to $3 per barrel.

SKINS—Pelts are up to 30c., and lamb skins are 40c. Calfskins are unchanged at 5 to 7c.

STRAW—Is quiet at $6 to $8.

WOOL—Is coming in very freely but not going out. Prices are 18 to 19c.

FISH.

Few fish suffice to satisfy the demand these days which keeps on at the snail pace of the past several weeks. Prices are unchanged and stocks are kept small. The fish now to be had are white and salmon trout at 6½c., lake herring at $1.50 to $1.75, and B. C. salmon at 15 to 16c.

GREEN FRUIT.

Mediterranean sweets are $5.50 and nearly done. Rodis are $7.50 and scarce. Of other oranges those in most abundant supply are Sorrentos and Palermos, which sell in 200's at $4.25 to $4.50. There are no Palermo lemons. Messinas are $5.50 and plentiful. Oranges have not sold freely since the influx of small fruit. Lemons have been dull throughout the week, as a consequence of the cool weather we have had. Pineapples are no longer in stock, their season is over. Bananas are very plentiful and rather neglected, quoting at $1.75 for firsts and $1.25 to $1.50 for seconds.

SMALL FRUITS, ETC.

Raspberries are very plentiful at 8 to 9c. Cherries are 75c., with an easier tendency. Peaches are $2.25. Apricots are done. California plums are $2.25. Cucumbers are 90c. in boxes and $1.75 for four-basket crates of Acme and $1.25 for four-basket crates of Trophy. Watermelons are 20 to 25c. Cucumbers are 60 to 70c. per doz.

PROVISIONS.

A very good trade goes on in provisions. The local demand is steady at a high point of activity, while inquiry from outside points continues.

BACON—Long clear is firm at 8 to 8¼c., bellies at 10 to 10½c., backs at 10 to 10½c., rolls at 8½ to 9c.

HAMS—Are very scarce. Smoked are firm at 11½ to 12c.

LARD—Is firm at 10 to 10½c.

MESS PORK—Virtually there is no heavy mess, though quotations may be continued at $15 for United States. Short cut is steady at $16.

DRY GOODS.

The trade look forward to a good business in the fall. The majority of the travelers are taking holidays. Nothing in the way of change in prices is to be noted.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, July 23, 1891.

All leading lines of groceries have exhibited a gratifying share of activity during the past week, and a generally hopeful feeling actuates the trade, while payments are not being complained of, and the favorable crop reports from different sections is a strong factor of encouragement. Sugar, tea, and coffee, dried fruit, in fact all lines have been subjected to a good demand, a considerable quantity of stock, as will be seen from the appended reviews, leaving first hands, while the tone of values, generally, are shady. The week, on the whole, has been a good one.

SUGAR, ETC.

This has been a brisk market, and now from sheer want of supplies, business is somewhat restricted for refiners are blocked with orders. Indeed the idea of importing English sugar has been broached, as at present values it could be laid down here, but the speculators who are disposed to go in on this are afraid that after the refiners get ahead with their orders and the tension is relieved that there will be a shrinkage in values which would bring them a loss on importation. Refined stock has advanced ⅛ in New York, and prices here are very firm at 4⅝c., and it may take on another fraction. Some raw sugar has arrived recently, but nothing has been done in it yet, with the scarcity of other stock, however, and the firmness of yellows, the holders of it ought to do well, for yellows are held at 4c. and over, according to color.

Syrups continue nominal in the absence of offerings from the refiners.

MOLASSES.

This market is firm at 42c. for small lots, the jobbing trade being good. A cargo lot of 900 puncheons has changed hands at 40c. and we quote 42c. for jobbing transactions. Since our last some 2000 puncheons has arrived and a good portion of it has been turned over on the above basis. No further quantity of any account is expected after this.

TEAS.

There has been a good active trade in teas during the week, a good round quantity of Japan stock running from 19 to 23c. having changed hands. Grades below this are quiet, while there is more enquiry for blacks. On the whole the tea market is an encouraging one.

RICE.

There is no particular change in rice with a good distributive change to note. We quote : Patna, $4.50 to $5; choice, $4.25 to $4.50; standard $3.90, and off-grades, $3.50 in car lots.

COFFEES AND SPICES.

The coffee market has continued active with the movement restricted simply on account of the small supply. A good fair quantity of Rio has been moved during the week at 20c. and Jamaicas are moving at 20 to 21c.

British Markets.

Having closed out our local business, we are now prepared to give special attention to all lines of for good grades. Java remains as before. Spices are dull and unchanged with no call to speak of.

DRIED FRUIT.

There was quite an active business in dried fruit since our last, and some good round quantities both of raisins and currants have been turned over, so that stock on spot are pretty well reduced, in fact the market is bare as regards first hands while values generally are firm Scarcity of currants has already been noted, and this condition still prevails, for stock arriving was picked up and moved forward almost immediately at 5¾ to 6c., and now with small supplies a good enquiry and higher values in New York, prices here are ⅛ to ⅜ higher at 5⅞ to 6¼c. which we now quote as a range. In raisins the low price 3¾c. combined with a good enquiry effected a large reduction of stock, the supply in the hands of the principal holder on the market being cut down to 1,000 boxes, the sales during the week from first hands aggregating over 4,000 boxes. This movement, combined with improvement in New York, has induced a firmer feeling here and now it is unlikely that any stock even in round lots could be moved under 4c. and we quote 4 to 4¼c. as holders are now freely asking it for prime fruit.

CANNED GOODS.

There is a fair enquiry for salmon and business in round quantities from first hands has been done on a basis of $1.15 to $1.20. Tomatoes also have been active some, and 1,000 cases have been placed at 95c. to $1 since our last. On the whole there is a good fair enquiry for staple lines.

GREEN FRUIT.

In green fruit there is a good active business and supplies of most descriptions are kept well cleared up. Lemons are steady with a good business at $4.50 to $5 and oranges move with freedom at $6 to $7.50 per case. Bananas are steady at $1.25 to $1.75, and pineapples 2 to 10c. each in barrels.

FISH.

The fish market remains dull and uninteresting, with no business to speak of except the merest jobbing kind. There is no stock arriving in any quantity, while the demand is small, therefore we have no change to note. Next week supplies will commence to arrive, dry cod, mackerel, etc., etc., and until then the market is likely to remain dull.

HOPS.

The hop market locally is purely nominal for with nothing offering here to speak of, and little demand, business is unimportant. In fact there is no business at all to note, unless it be a bale now and then. Advices from the States are somewhat firmer, but some hops are selling now in New York for a wonderful reduction on what was offered for them last year. One transaction that is reported is a case in point. A grower was offered 45c. for a round lot, he refused and held all through the winter and now it is said sold for 15c., a loss of $60 a bale compared with the 45c. refused last fall.

PROVISIONS.

Provisions generally are firmer in sympathy with the stronger feeling in the west, but business does not improve to any material extent, while prices here are not quotably higher : — Canadian short cut, per barrel, $16.25 to $16.75; mess pork, western, per barrel $15.00 to $15.50; short cut, western, per brl $16.25 to $16.75 ; hams, city cured, per pound 10 to 11c.; hams, canvassed, per lb 0 00 to 0 00c.; lard, Canadian, in pails, 8¾ to 9c.; bacon, per pound, 9 to 10c.; lard, com., refined, per lb, 7¾ to 8c.

EGGS.

This market shows no change of a material kind, while values on the whole are maintained. The demand is fair and we quote prices steady at 12½ to 13c. the market showing no accumulation.

BUTTER.

The butter market is not satisfactory with the demand restricted as it is. The cause is simple, holders are getting in some cases full figures on creamery, and they imagine that a regular movement can be induced on the basis. If it can it is a long time coming, and it looks now as though shippers and dealers here were content to let the factorymen carry the article since the latter stick out for a high figure, taking only what they want, confident that if there is any call later on they will be able to get what they want with the accumulation of early makes, and the later makes becoming a factor. Factorymen ought to realize this also and be content with a reasonable figure, for it is quite likely that some practical concession would lead to business in a general way on creamery. The same remarks apply to Western dairy. Creamery 18 to 19c., Townships dairy 16 to 18c., Morrisburg and Brockville 16 to 17c., Western dairy 14 to 15c.

CHEESE.

Cheese has had quite an active week of it, and the benevolent gentlemen, who made those low offers, have not had a rosy time of it recently. They tried to be very clever, sold short, and it is more than likely that some of them were punched pretty badly, and it serves them right, for they interfere with the regular course of the market by their tactics. Colored continues to have the preference, and since a week ago has established an advance of ⅛ to ⅜c., and now stands at 8⅞ to 9c., while white runs from

MARKETS—Continued.

8⅝ to 8¾c., on which basis business has been done. The cable is higher also, at 4 3-6. We quote finest colored, 8⅞ to 9c. ; finest white, 8⅝ to 8¾c. ; fine, 8⅜ to 8½c. ; Medium 8¼ to 8⅜c. ; Cable, 43s. 6d.

GRAIN.

There is little change in grain business generally being quiet while prices are unchanged. The stock in store compared with those of a week ago, show a decrease of 8,517 bushels of wheat, 24,651 bushels of oats, 193,196 bushels of barley and an increase of 689 bushels of corn, 12,386 bushels of peas. Compared with the corresponding date last year there is an increase of 251,804 bushels of wheat, and a decrease of 110,035 bushels of corn, 86,885 bushels of peas, 33,354 bushels of oats, and 13,217 bushels of barley. We quote :—No. 1 hard Manitoba, $0 ; No. 2 $1.10 ; to $1.12 ; No. 3 do., 99c ; No. 2 Northern, $1.01 to $1.03 ; feed do., 70c; peas 91c. per 66 pounds in store; 92c. afloat; Manitoba oats; 52½c. to 53½c.; Upper Canada do., 55½c. to 56c. per 34 pounds; corn, 72c. to 75c. duty paid; feed barley, 56c. to 58c; good malting do., 65c. to 67c.

FLOUR.

The flour market has been helped materially by recent export business which has pulled down stocks some 1100 odd barrels during the week, and with the low prices ruling the market has a very hopeful feeling. The stock in store is 11,896 barrels less than a week ago and 2,331 barrels compared with a year ago. Patent spring $5.50 to $0.00 patent winter $5.25 to $5.55; straight roller $4.95 to $5,00; extra $4.60 to $4.75; superfine $4.00 to $4.20; city strong bakers' $5.25 to $0.00; strong bakers' $5,00 to $5.20.

IMPORTANT FACTS
ABOUT NOURISHING FOODS.

"OUR NATIONAL FOODS," put up in packages only, are not ordinary foods. They are prepared by the conversion of the starch into dextrine. THEY CONTAIN OVER DOUBLE THE NOURISHMENT THAT IS IN FLESH MEAT. A 4 lb. PACKAGE OF IRELAND'S DESICCATED WHEAT AT 25c. CONTAINS 30 GRAINS MORE NOURISHMENT THAN 10 lbs. OF BEEFSTEAK COSTING ABOUT $1.50. THINK OF THAT. People are beginning to find it out, when they ask now for Ireland's Desiccated Wheat in packages they mean it. The grocer need not say "we have it in bulk just as good," for the customer is at once suspicious, for we do not sell it in bulk. Sold by all first-class grocers and manufactured only by

HALIFAX MARKET QUOTATIONS.

(Wholesale Selling Rates.)

HALIFAX, July 22, 1891.

BREADSTUFFS — Continue unchanged.—Many of the mills have closed down owing to scarcity of wheat, and yet there seems to be considerable flour ground up ready for shipment.

We shall not see any lower prices before October, and the chances are we shall see higher prices So far as we are concerned we do not want to sell flour made from raw wheat before October.

Manitoba highest grade patents, $6.00 to 6.25 ; High grade patents, $5.60 to 5.75 ; Good 90 per cent Patents, $5.30 to 5.40 ; Straight grade, $5.10 to 5.20 ; Superior extras, $4.85 to 5.10 ; Good seconds, $4.65 to 5.65 ; Graham flour, $4.90 to 5.10 ; Oatmeal, $6 ; Oatmeal rolled, $6.10 ; Kiln dried cornmeal, $3 to 3.60 ; Rolled wheat, $5.50 ; Wheat bran per ton, $19 to 20 ; Shorts per ton $26 to 27 ; Middlings $27.50 to 28.50 ; Cracked corn, $35 ; Ground oil cake, $34 to $35 ; Moulee, $30 ; Split peas, $4.40 to $4.50 ; White beans per bushel, $1.80 to 2 ; Pot barley per barrel, $3.90 to 4.10 ; Canadian oats, choice quality, 63c. to 65c. ; Hay per ton, $11.75 to 13.

MOLASSES—There is a fair jobbing trade going on in molasses, but the stocks everywhere are known to be small, so that holders show no disposition at all to hurry or force sales believing that prices are sure to go up before long. Advices from the Island continue to be very strong and this imparts a firm tone to American and Canadian markets.

Barbados, 40c. ; Demerara, 35 to 38c. ; Diamond N. 48c.; Porto Rico, 37 to 38c.; Trinidad, 34 to 35c. ; Antigua, 34 to 35.

SUGARS.—The movement of refined sugar during the past week has been brisk and of large volume. From now out as the small fruit season has just set in it is to be expected that the movement will be heavy. There is a good demand for yellows. The market for raw sugars is very firm and holders are not forcing supplies as they appear to have great confidence in the future.

Cut loaf, 5c. ; Granulated, 4¾c. ; Circle A, 4½c.; White extra C, 3½c.; Standard, 3¾c.; Extra yellow C, 3½c. ; Yellow C, 3⅜c.

FISH.—There have been no new features to note in our fish market since our last report. A few small lots of new catch cod have been brought in, but they were not sufficient to produce any effect on the market. However, what were received sold at $4 for small and $5 for large. Bait continues to be extremely scarce so that though cod and kindred fish are plentiful it is impossible to take them. The Mackerel that hovered about our coasts for the past two weeks have nearly all left and only a few are now being taken.

Codfish, Hard C. B. $5 ; Western Shore, $4.50 ; Haddock, $3 ; Hard C. B. $3.50 ; Bank and Western, $3.25 ; Hake $2.50.

ST. JOHN, N.B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N.B., July 22, 1891.

Sugar still continues to be in good demand —in fact is the one article in the grocery line that every one calls for. Fruits also are selling readily and reports are that there will be a plentiful supply.

SUGAR.—There is very little to note in the sugar market, as prices remain firm and a good steady demand. Granulated is quoted $4.65 to $4.80, yellows $3.90 to $4⅜.

MOLASSES—Is a shade easier. Barbadoes is quoted 38 to 39c.

FLOUR.—At present it is very difficult to give the market on flour, as quotations received would indicate higher prices shortly —while holders of stocks seem inclined to sell even if lower figures have to be given to do so. Trade is about as usual, and prices have not changed materially. Manitoba is quoted $6.10 to $6.25, Ontario high grades $5.60 to $5.70, medium patents $5.30 to $5.40.

CORN MEAL.—There is no change either in price or demand, only a small jobbing trade is being done. A cargo of American ground was landed last week and sold at $3.40 per barrel.

OATMEAL—There is a steady demand for oatmeal, and prices have not changed. Roller is quoted $6.10 to $6.15; standard, $5.95 to $6.

FEED—There is nothing new to report, the price remains unchanged and is selling quite steadily at $27.50 to $28.50 per ton.

OATS—Are selling at 59 to 61c.

PROVISIONS—Clear pork is quoted $16.50 to $17, plate beef $15.25 to $15.75; hams, cured, 11 to 12c.; roll bacon, 9½ to 10½c.

EGGS—The market is steady at 12 to 13c.

BUTTER—No change, 15 to 18c. seems the ruling prices.

FISH—Large cod are scarce and sell readily at $4.25 to $4.50, mediums $3.75 to $4, pickled herring (bay) are selling ex vessels at $1.45 to $1.50, smoked herring have advanced some, and now are selling at 11 to 12½c.

NOTES.

Trade among the retailers has been considerably affected lately on account of a strike at the lumber mills, as the owners wished to go back to the 10 hour system, the men refusing to do so. As a consequence most of the mills are idle and hundreds of men are out of work.

There have been several failures among the retail grocers lately. First was McGovern Brothers, who ran a small grocery and in the winter got out lumber. They lost on their lumber and had to assign. John A. Cunningham closed up. The want of good business training is given as the cause.

Samuel McBride who has been doing a large business at Haymarket square, assigned Saturday 18th. There are several judgments standing against him in amounts from $600 to $1000, it is not known yet what his liabilities are.

James R. Hatfield who has been doing business on the City Road, gave a bill of sale of his stock last week and is closed up now. Report say she has skipped to the States.

John S. Lake whose store was on Paradice Row, is in difficulty. Could not be found at his place of business to-day.

GO IN AND WIN.

In New York city alone are constantly 40,000 persons out of employment. In other cities the proportion is the same according to population. All these unfortunate individuals profess their anxiety to work, to toil for almost any price, that they may keep soul and body together. The sole reason why they do not work, they would have it believed, is because the world is against them and will not suffer them to earn an honest living.

Try them. Give them employment. It will be found that not one sewing woman in five can even run a decent seam. Not one girl in ten of those who profess to do housework can kindle a fire properly. Of the men, not one carpenter in four can be trusted to perform a simple task in woodwork. Not one iron worker in four can do exactly what he professes to do. In large printing offices, it is with great difficulty that satisfactory proof readers are secured. Among stenographers and typewriters, undoubtedly, not one in twenty knows the proper construction of the English language, or enough of current events and literature to make a tolerable business letter writer. Probably a third of them are shaky in their spelling.

This is why three-fourths of the unemployed in America are out of work. They are out of work because they have not gone in with all their might to prepare themselves in the best way for what they had chosen. They did not go in to win. If one who has a task to do puts all his soul into it, and resolves that he will do it as well as it can be done no matter how simple it is, that person will not be long out of employment. The world has its soul vexed out of it because of slovenly work. Life is a burden to those who hire employes, because of things half-done.

All depends on the spirit with which one starts in life. The winner selects his future occupation carefully. He is bound down to no particular rut of success. He only knows that whatever task he has selected, he is going to accomplish it as well as it is possible to do it, and that in the long run he is going to win. He may be out of employment. He may be forced to change his occupation. But he still knows that in him is good, faithful work ; that there is a field for it somewhere, and it is his place to find that field. The winner is he who never lets himself run down.—B. C. Commercial Journal.

A NUISANCE TO TRAVELING SALESMEN.

One of our greatest nuisances of the present day, and one to which traveling men are especially subjected, is the almost universal manner in which tips to servants are given wherever and whenever the slightest service has been rendered. Originally intended as a token of appreciation of some service rendered in an unusually good manner, or close attention to ones wants, it has grown to such proportions that it is now expected, and generally paid wherever service is performed, whether particularly well done or not.

An occasional gratuity for good services rendered is quite correct. It is in its universality that the evil lies, and for this state of affairs travelers have themselves to thank. Promiscuous tipping on any and all occasions has led the serving class to expect it, while thoughtless tips out of all proportions to the service rendered has had the effect of raising the amount which is expected.

While this might not be noticed as an occasional evil, it becomes of really serious moment to the man of limited means who is compelled to be on the road a greater part of the year, and is a constant hotel patron, for it is in hotels that the tipping evil reaches its highest perfection.

Many who deplore the evil and would if they could avoid it, say, that it is often a choice between getting little attention, and that of the poorest, or giving a tip, and that in the end they find it better for their comfort and peace of mind to give in gracefully and give the expected fee.

Tipping can not be entirely done away with, nor would it be advisable if it could, for a small gratuity for service exceptionally well performed is proper, and tends to increase the efficiency of the serving class. It is in the extent to which it is carried and the amount paid that the evil lies, and this can be remedied if traveling men determine that they will give only where faithful and efficient services warrant it, and that the amount given shall be strictly in proportion to the services rendered. On the Continent, tipping is regulated by established custom as to the amounts paid for a given service, and no more is expected or given. It would be a good thing if a similar system were instituted in this country.—Ex.

The trader who pays his way must sell at a profit, and cannot afford to cut below others in the same line.

Credit is often too cheap and overbubing far too common. Don't be guilty of the one, and don't abuse the other.

Competition is keen and active, and the only way to meet it successfully is to buy from the best houses, and at lowest prices.

GURD'S Ginger Ale is guaranteed Superior to all others. Orders promptly attended to.

MOLASSES VERSUS COAL FOR FUEL.

The remarkable proposal is made by the sugar interest of New Orleans to utilize a surplus of molasses by burning it for fuel instead of coal. With a crop of 550,000,000 pounds of sugar, there will be 700,000 barrels, 27,000,000 gallons, or 300,000,000 pounds of molasses, which the planters do not know how to get rid of. It is added that the output of molasses in Louisiana is now so great that there is no market for the lower grades and it doesn't pay to sell it. It is this emergency that brings about the startling proposal of molasses for fuel which on its face would seem even more wasteful than the burning of their corn by the Western farmers, against which there arose such a popular outcry a few years ago. But it is contended that molasses makes really much cheaper fuel than either corn or coal, and here is the comparison with the respect to the latter: "The lowest grades of vacuum pan molasses contain from 20 to 25 per cent. of sugar, which cannot be extracted by existing machinery. Estimating a barrel of such molasses to be worth net 50 cents or $1 a barrel to hold 550 pounds of molasses, the molasses would be worth 1 to 2 cents a gallon and from 1-11 to 4-5 cents a pound. Pittsburg coal, brought to the sugar house furnace, has for about ten years cost 1-5 cent per pound."—Stoves and Hardware Reporter.

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER, issued weekly, subscription price $2 00 per year.

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

The law of cohesion is gradually asserting itself in the grocery trade. Like interests are grouping the forces of localities into distinct bodies, while the movement to unify and concentrate the action of these in a national or provincial corporation makes safe progress. The number of associations formed has been greater during the present than during any former summer, and the number of them that have connected themselves with the Toronto body is gratifyingly large. What will further tend to give compactness to the grocery trade is the coming convention, which will stimulate both local organization and national solidarity. True solidarity is the thing that is wanted. If it exists associations will hang together, otherwise they will not. It is the property which distinguishes common movement, whether for the immediate gain or the immediate loss of the individuals, so long as the ultimate end is the general advancement of the common cause. If the cutter has to be extinguished and it is thought expedient to shear off the whole fringe of profit on some line to suppress him, there ought to be as much readiness to agree to do this as there ought to be to resort to some proposed means to secure direct advantage.

The healthy circulation of opinion within association channels will be provided for when local associations exist everywhere and they are linked together. Such a circulation will be a strong preservative and incentive, and may be expected to withstand the tendency of small bodies to fall into decay when exciting local questions are not present to bring them together. Questions will drift along the current of Association sympathy, through the medium of constitutional connection, and the lack of local issues will be made up for by the introduction by correspondence of questions from outside. The general federation, when it is once accomplished, will no doubt have its council, whose business will in part be the preparation and prescription of subjects for discussion at periodical meetings of all the local associations. This would be useful from many points of view. The lesson leaves of Sunday school associations are analogous outlines of work sketched by a central committee and accepted by all the branches. Such a course would be merely supplementary to the local programme, and would be for the purpose of giving distinctness and force to association opinion.

* * * *

The most of the local associations formed this year have come into being since the agitation to hold a convention was started. This seems to signify that a general movement to sift questions peculiar to the grocery trade will do more to unite the trade at all competitive points than the pressure of merely local problems. There is a feeling that something can be done by a fusion of all the grocery influence in the country, while there may not be much faith in the potency of an isolated town association. Clearly it seems that one of the best encouragers to the development of local organization is such an attempt as the convention is proposed to be to focus the general sense of the provincial trade upon leading questions. The importance of that meeting cannot be over-estimated, therefore, and its success is an object in which the services of every Toronto association man ought to be warmly enlisted. It ought to be the forerunner of many other such gatherings held annually.

* * * *

An object that should be more distinctly enunciated in the statement of benefits aimed at by associations is the protection of the trade against the undermining methods that constitute the competitive strategy of certain traders. Protection against the deadbeat, the jobber or the manufacturer is more easily provided for, but the insidious work of the price-cutter, the unprincipled opposition that speaks ill of a rival, that questions the weight he deals out, the purity of the goods he sells, or the soundness of his position in business ought to be stifled, and associations should set themselves against such practices. Reputable dealing ought to get more encouragement than it does, it should receive not only moral countenance but active and declared support from the association.

* * * *

It seems to be the case that there are fewer failures among the members of associations than among non-members. Those who become members, by that act show themselves possessed of a desire to do business according to the best light, and are likely to take whatever steps they can to make a success of their trade. They also strengthen themselves as business men to hold their own against the difficulties of trade, when they join an association, and the association may fairly be ranked as a force that makes for solvency. When it gets a little older it will probably rank high among the causes of success. Like all institutions it can not come in for historic treatment until it has unrolled its character over two or three generations, and has established a past that is looked back to for imitation.

AN EXPORT TRADE IN CANNED GOODS.

The conditions for doing an export trade in canned goods, particularly in fruits, are now realized. We have an abundance of small fruits, there is a demand for these fruits in the British market, our sugar is on the free list, and our tin plate is likewise duty—free. The fact that the United States duty on tin plate is 2 1-5c. per lb. handicaps our only competitor on this continent in the rivalry for British and European trade in the small fruits grown in this country. In other respects we are on the same footing. Free sugar is enjoyed by the United States, and what tends probably to keep prices at a lower level than they rule here is the fact that raw up to No. 16 Dutch standard is also free, while raw is free here only up to No. 14 of the same standard. We have an advantage in the fact that there is a general disposition in Britain to foster a more strictly internal trade policy among the parts of the Empire, though of course not to the exclusion of trade with other nations. The first item in the programme of subjects suggested for consideration at the Congress of the Chambers of Commerce of the Empire for 1892, is "Commercial relations of the Mother Country with her colonies and possessions, with special regard to the renewal of European treaties, and recent commercial legislation in the United States."

Of course the United States canners will not feel at once the full force of the disadvantage the heavy duty on their plate places them under. The duty came into effect after several months' warning on the 1st of July, so that they had ample opportunity, that they did not neglect, to lay in large supplies in advance of present needs before the change in the tariff affected them. But at the best their tin plate cost them 1 1-10c. per lb. more than ours, as prior to the 1st of July it had to bear a duty equal to that difference, But the difference in the comparative cost of tin plate to us and the United States is not balanced by adding an amount to our outlay for tin plate equal to an equivalent rate of duty. Our plate is cheaper to us by another circumstance. The necessity for buying before the 1st of July, recognized simultaneously by all United States importers of tin plate, turned a very sudden and heavy volume of demand upon the English market which brought up the value of the tin plate. When that demand ceased prices went down, and there was yet time for Canadians to do some business. The United States tin plate importers therefore bought on a rising market, while the Canadians bought on a falling one. When we come to sell our fruits this advantage should tell very greatly in our favor.

AN OFFICIAL ANALYSIS OF TEA.

The twenty-fourth in the series of bulletins issued by the Inland Revenue Department at Ottawa presents the results of a very searching and comprehensive examination of the physical and chemical properties of the tea that is sold in this country. The bulletin contains the report of Professor Edgar B. Kenrick, official analyst of Manitoba, upon fifty-eight samples of tea that had been submitted to him for analysis, and contains as well an introduction by Mr. Thomas Macfarlane, Chief Analyst of the Department. In the introduction comparison is made as to usefulness of result, between extraction by the methods of the analysts and the domestic method. The latter, which was followed by Prof. Kenrick, is plainly shown to be the more suitable. The household method of drawing does not effect complete extraction of soluble substances, but what is left in the leaf contains more than half of the tannin, the astringent principle in tea, and the one identified among the causes of dyspepsia. The theine, a constituent that is considered beneficial, being a remedy for sick headache, is wholly rendered by the household method. Complete extraction, which exact scientific methods enable the analyst to arrive at, would be misleading and rather unfair to base a judgment of the wholesomeness of tea upon, as it would show the presence of an astringent element in a far higher degree than it ever appears in the tea we drink.

The quality of our tea has been vindicated rather than otherwise by the results of Prof. Kenrick's analysis. Only two or three out of the fifty-eight samples examined appear to have been adulterated. He found no leaves from any other source than the tea plant. As to exhausted leaves, there was difficulty in determining how much an excess over a conventional maximum of ash might be due to them, the maximum adopted being in the Professor's opinion too high. One sample seemed to be adulterated with exhausted leaves. No adulteration by means of sand, magnetic oxide of iron or other mineral substances was discovered. The coloring or "facing" of teas was not systematically investigated, the analyst regarding the substances used as harmless, inappreciable in weight and fraudulent only when they disguised an inferior tea. The popular theory that the color of green and Japan teas is due to the presence of copper acquired from copper vessels during the process of preparation, may date its explosion with the issue of this pamphlet, as the Professor states that he can find no record of copper ever having been detected in tea. The green color is natural, and is imparted to tea as to nearly all plants by chlorophyll. Further, this chlorophyll is not dissolved out by the tea-maker. Two of the Gunpowder samples illustrated the "lie tea" that is heard of now and then. They were composed of "little spherules of agglutinated dust and dirt made up in clever imitations of the genuine leaf-balls." Lie-tea is swept from the floors of warehouses, and is worked up with coloring matter and rice water to a very clever imitation of good gunpowder tea. It appears that it most frequently occurs in the class known as Ping Suey.

Upon the relation to quality of the physical characteristics of the leaves, the Professor says:

"The primary causes influencing the value of a tea appear to be chiefly the age of the plant, the age of the leaf, and the time of year at which the leaves are picked. The younger the leaf the more tender and juicy will it be, and the more ready to give up its soluble constituents to hot water. Thus, the more valuable grades of any kind of tea will consist of the younger and smaller leaves. Much will naturally depend upon the care bestowed upon it in its preparation, and no doubt the quality of a tea is much influenced by the nature of the soil, the climate, etc. Furthermore, as is well known, tea loses its "goodness" on keeping, the characteristic aroma and odor gradually passing off. Thus, even if it were possible by the physical characters alone to judge of the value of a tea at a known interval from the date of its preparation, owing to the deterioration which takes place on keeping, it would be impossible by an examination of the leaves alone to form an estimate of their value if the year of their growth were unknown.

In the technical valuation of tea the "tea-taster" pours a measured quantity of boiling water on a weighed amount of the tea sample, and after the lapse of exactly three minutes pours off the infusion from the leaves. The unrolled leaves left in the vessel are carefully examined, and note taken of their size and the extent to which they are broken up or damaged. In forming a judgment on the infusion, both the strength and flavor are taken into account, and the peculiar odor of the unfolded leaves is noticed. It may thus happen that two tea samples, having equally good "drawing" or infusing qualities, may have a very different commercial value, owing to the difference in the physical characters of the leaves. In the process of manufacture the different sized leaves are separated by sifting, and no doubt in this process a quantity of fine fragments and dust is obtained, and this, though possibly having good drawing qualities, would be sold at a cheap rate. Among the samples I have examined there were teas consisting very largely of these small fragments, and as these samples had very little of the characteristic odor of tea it may be that teas consisting of these broken-up leaves would deteriorate more rapidly than those made up of tightlyrolled, perfect leaves.

The analyst shows that in black and Japan teas the soluble solids increase with the price, and the insoluble ash, or that which cannot be extracted by brewing, decreases. Sometimes a cheap tea will give a very strong infusion, its cheapness being due to the fragmentary leaves composing it. Dark green Japan teas appear to give the richest extract. Congous give a less amount of total solids in solution than greens and Japans, and Indian and Ceylon infusions yield more solid matter than Congous, and less than greens and Japans. Black teas have less of the tannim than Japans and greens, and in that respect are not liable to retard digestion. On the other hand they contain more of theine than green, which is another advantage.

CANADA'S INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

Arrangements are in progress for holding a dairyman's convention at St. John, N.B., during this exhibition, and it is expected that several experts will be present and will give some lectures on dairy interests. Arrangements are also being made for showing several varieties of cream separators and other dairy apparatus in operation. It is also proposed to offer some special prizes for dairy products, and that the competition may be open to all the provinces. Prof. Robertson, of the Dominion Experimental Farm, who is now visiting the creameries and cheese factories throughout the maritime provinces, is taking quite an active interest in this matter. The exhibition opens on September 23rd and continues until October 3rd.

PRICE TICKETS.

In an article treating of the rather stale subject of the ticketing of goods, an exchange recently referred to the fact that a large number of metropolitan retail grocers' are opposed to the practice, and proceeded to point out the advantages to be derived from the use of price tickets. The Merchant's Review always has favored the practice, but we can understand why a good many dealers do not adopt it, and believe it to be against their best interests to urge them to do so without a clear understanding of the peculiar circumstances of each case. Tickets affixed to goods and bearing the price of the article,which perhaps a few words of commendation, are expected to attract the attention of customers to either the superior quality or the low price of the goods to which they are attached. Now, if the quality is nothing to brag of, and the price rather above than below the market rate, it is clear that a price ticket would do more harm than good. Take the case of fruits, for instance, which are peculiarly well adapted to special display and the use of price placards, because they are usually placed on the sidewalk outside the store where they can catch the eyes of passersby, and are extremely perishable, requireing to be disposed of quickly. Walk through some of the city's streets and avenues, and notice the fruit displays of many grocery stores. It will be found that neither the quality or the price of the goods is deserving of special notice, and therefore a price placarded could do no possible good. Another point—a minor one perhaps but still worthy of consideration—is the habit many people have of beating down the price of everything. When such people are numbered among the customers of a retailer, he can escape a prolonged controvercy over prices and more easily effect a sale by giving them a higher price than his regular rate, knowing, of course, that they will not close the bargain until the price asked has been reduced considerably. This perfectly justifiable proceeding—under the circumstances mentioned—would be impossible were the goods all marked with their prices.

However, there can be no dispute as to the value of price tickets when attached to goods possessing distinctive merits, either of quality or cheapness, or both, and there is no doubt that they are not sufficiently employed by otherwise enterprising dealers, who possibly entertain the notion that they savor of the Cheap John style of doing business, and therefore are beneath the dignity of a reputable food purveyor—Merchants' Review.

GROCERS' SHOW WINDOWS.

Having for ten years draped windows of all styles and sizes, plain and fancy, spectacular and artistic, I should say in a general way, arrange grocers' windows on a plan similar to that adopted by dry goods houses, men's furnishers, clothiers, etc.; that is to display one line of goods each week, and not show so many articles at one time. The foundations may consist of boxes and a few boards. By taking a look at grocers' windows in any city or town, you will find that the goods displayed are invariably arranged at the bottom of the window and usually create no interest in a passer-by; when, if the windows were built up with goods on foundations, how much more it would add to the effect and to the appearance of the windows! The solid display will make the passer-by stop to inspect the articles shown.

To arrange a window after the manner stated, I would suggest a display of relishes, as pickles, sauces, catsups, etc.. showing everything that is carried in stock in that line, and display it for one week. The arrangement can be carried out by beginning at the bottom of the window near the glass. After covering the floor with clean white paper, arrange the bottles in a tasteful manner; then at each end place a box, which should be covered with white paper, and lay a board from one box to the other. On this shelf you can begin in the center and build up a small pyramid of pickle bottles; on each side form a circle of sauces; then a bottle of mixed pickles, and another circle of catsups. Back of this shelf build one still higher, which will require higher boxes. If you have a pretty advertisement relative to sauces, display it in the centre, and on each side you can display the goods which are described in the advertisement. Continue to arrange until the shelf is full. A third shelf, and a fourth if necessary, may be added, and filled with goods from this department. Neat cards may be distributed throughout the window, marked with the different brands of sauces; and to complete the effect, one or two advertising frames can be arranged at the back of the window. This display can be changed to include everything in the fish line, as sardines, lobsters, salmon, shrimps, etc., the same arrangement being followed, the different brands being shown in various styles as taste dictates, but with a slight change, which may be made by the use of an arch which can be cut from a board the width of a box of sardines. The sardine boxes may be attached to the arch by a narrow strip of tin or by a wire. On each box of sardines a letter can be fastened, cut from pasteboard, the whole arranged to spell the firm's name. This arch may be placed in the centre of the window directly over the steps.

A display from the department of washing compounds, such as starch, soaps, soda, pearline, blue, etc., is easy to make. For this display a novelty may be introduced by placing in the centre of the window a washtub, washboard, etc. Around this may be displayed several bars of soap, packages of starch, pearline, etc. If a picture advertising card can be procured of a washing compound, place it at the washtub. On each side of this steps should be built at least to the height of the centre of the window, and ornamental shelf paper laid on the steps. You can then build up stacks and pyramids of soaps, or you can take long bars of soap and lay diagonally from one step to the step above, and between place a package of starch or soda. Another novelty for the centre of a window is to build a miniature house from packages of pearline, which is done by making a skeleton framework and securing the pearline to it. You can place soda in front of the house, and build a fence from bars of soap. Then run several clothes lines and hang up small pieces of wearing apparel just as from the wash. A miniature washtub with a doll dressed as an old washerwoman, will complete the scene.

The coffee department can be arranged in a manner somewhat different from the others; and right here I will say that there is nothing that creates more interest than the constant change of window displays, always getting up new ideas which in themselves are advertisements. I would arrange the packages of coffee, put up for the purpose, in the form of columns. The columns can be made by sawing out three round pieces from a board, and nailing on strips—a circle at the top and one at the bottom, and one in the centre. The columns you nail to the floor. You then start from the floor, building around the column, and build up and tie with a stout cord so as to keep the packages in position. The columns can be built to any height. On the top of them a square board can be placed, and packages of coffee arranged as a finish. For a novelty a Turkish café can be erected. For this you merely require four uprights built in the shape of a square, and arches at the top which extend from upright to upright. Cover this with cloth, which forms the dome, and on the top place a crescent cut from pasteboard. The uprights can be concealed by building up packages of coffee to the dome. In the interior you can arrange coffee in bulk or in packages.—Harry Harman, Window Dresser.

A HUGE INDUSTRY.

Most people who have been to the Dominion capital have taken a run across the river to the lumber town of Hull, and viewed from the outside the collection of huge lumber and other mills clustered around the grand water power, which nature has placed on the Ottawa river at and around that town. Only a small number, however, have gone beyond the outside view, and only the small number who have visited and inspected the mills and factories of the E. B. Eddy Manufacturing Company have any idea of the triumph of enterprise, indomitable energy and mechanical skill there to be seen. In fact it is questionable if the works of this company do not furnish the greatest monument to industrial skill and enterprise in Canada. The magnitude of these works has its first indication in the appearance they present from the outside. They stretch along the bank of the river taking up an area of 165 acres and have nearly two miles of railway track, within this limit, when all switches and side-tracks are taken into consideration, while the buildings, distributed over and containing the different factories, are all built of solid stone, presenting a massive appearance, very unusual in connection with lumber factory structures.

Sufficient space for anything like an accurate description of all the different branches of manufacture cannot be given in this journal at present, and we must content ourselves with noting some points about the best known ones, commencing with the pioneer one, started in on a very small scale in the year 1854 by Mr. E. B. Eddy himself, namely,

THE MATCH FACTORY.

Few of those who carelessly use or waste the lucifer, can form any idea of the ingenuity brought to bear to facilitate and cheapen their manufacture. First the blocks of pine are cut and cross cut, until each block resembles a heckle or wool carder. The next process after the matches are cut clear of the blocks in the rolling machine. Belt conveyors carry the matches along to a small hub like wheel around which they are wound with a girth belt, until about half a gross of boxes full are formed in wheel shape, when the whole is removed in a solid shape, and a fresh hub attached to the machine and the winding process proceeded with. The embryo matches are on this hub two ordinary lucifers in length, so that in the sulphur dip, and afterwards in the phosphorous dip, both sides of the wheel of splints are dipped, and after drying and taking off the wheel they are taken on to another belt conveyor, leading to a circular cutter, which cuts them in equal halves, thus leaving the ordinary full fledged lucifer. It is worthy of note that the old system of fire meting the phosphorus dip has been superceded by high steam heating in the troughs, thus avoiding all danger of the explosions which so frequently occurred in match factories in years past. The most wonderful piece of machinery in the whole factory is the match box cutter. The band of tough paper from which those boxes are made is conveyed by an ingenious piece of mechanism off the roll, into the cutter in which it is cut, grooved at the seams, printed and glued, pressed into form, and thrown out a box complete. The whole process has no paralell for mechanical completeness, except it be that mythical machine of the minstrel negro, into which sucker fish were thrown, and by placing the mouth to a tube and turning a crank handle the cooked fish went down your throat, and the bones out into the back yard. When it is learned that the machine can turn out 280 boxes inside of one minute, its wondrous mechanism can be in some degree comprehended.

The next process is the boxing of the matches, and this is purely handiwork accomplished by girls, whose accuracy of grasp and touch is truly wonderful. How those nimble hands can grasp a handful of matches and stuff them into a paper sheath uncounted, not going three matches over or under the standard 100 in one box in a gross, is a study for the professional palmist.

Next in importance to the match factory, is the manufacture of

as the wood pulp utensils now so popular are called. The pulp used in the manufacture is almost the same as that used in making pulp for paper, and we need not therefore describe its manufacture. In making indurated ware this pulp reduced to a gruelly thickness and freed from lumps of every description is pressed into tubs, pails, dish pans or whatever utensils intended to be made, and under a hydraulic pressure of 160 pounds to the square inch it is moulded and turned out, and after this the moulded goods are dried and taken to another floor, where by different kinds of machine driven saws they are trimmed, then put upon a lathe they are polished. After this it is taken to the indurating vat and then thoroughly dipped in a solution which, as Dundreary says, "no fellow can understand," seeing the composition of the solution is kept a secret. After this the articles are dried in a kiln heated to 500 degrees fahrenheit. When dried in the kiln, another dipping takes place in a solution which puts on the glaze finish, after which the goods are ready for market, unless in pails, tubs, and such like where handles have to be fastened on. These goods are then strong enough to allow any man of more than average weight to jump upon them without their being injured, and there can be no doubt, but they must rapidly replace not only the wooden and crockery ware, but also a large proportion of the metallic ware utensils now in use.

Another Branch of this business is the manufacture of wooden ware, and especially of those wire hooped goods, which do not fall to pieces or become leaky if left for a length of time in a dry and empty state. The sawing, turning, hooping, handling and so forth of these goods are all calculated to awaken interest in any mind with a leaning to mechanical affairs; but after inspecting the match and indurated ware factories the manufacture of plain wooden ware becomes tame, we will, therefore, dispense with a detailed discription of its process.

The sash and door factory and the manufacture of paper pulp, and some other goods make up the balance of the industries carried on in these factories, the company having giving up the saw mill business a few years ago to go more fully into general manufacture of goods made from lumber and lumber-mill refuse. That the concern is a gigantic one, finds another proof in the fact, that in connection therewith some 2,500 hands are regularily employed, and at times the number reaches nearly 3,000. As already stated it is probably the greatest monument in Canada to mechanical skill and enterprise.

Like most gigantic industrial concerns the E. B. Eddy Company's works had a small beginning, when Mr. Eddy started his small match factory in 1854, and even with the pail and tub factory added in 1856, the institution was but a modest one. After going into lumbering and sash and door manufacture in 1858, the business went forward rapidly, but received a bad set back in 1873-4 during the great panic and crash, from which it recovered in 1877 and again went rapidly forward until the fall of 1882, when a disastrous fire swept away over two-thirds of the whole institution. It was after this fire, that the stone buildings were erected so as to avoid a similar disaster in future. Since then the company have had another turn of prosperity and progress, and the factories now take their place as one of the largest industrial concerns located at one point in the Dominion. Their wonderful growth and development are due almost entirely to the energy, enterprise and commercial courage of their founder and president of the existing company, Mr. E. B. Eddy. —Winnipeg Commercial.

Readers must keep in mind the western branch of this establishment, whose seat is in Toronto, at 29 Front street, west. Mr. T. A. Weldron—whose first initial, by the way, was misprinted S last week—extends a hearty invitation to all the trade to call, not necessarily for business, but to walk over the premises and be able afterwards to locate his wherabouts.

The Vancouver Board of Trade has published in pamphlet form its annual report for the year ending March, 1891. It is a very full statement of progress made and of resources developed, and of the industrial and physical possibilities of the province of British Columbia. It is an excellent compend of the economical and material growth of the province.

TORONTO GROCERS' PIC-NIC.

In spite of the warning of the Meteorological Department that the weather of the 29th would be diversified by local showers and thunderstorms, Toronto grocers and their friends sallied forth to have the fun that was due them by future contract on that particular day. They had yielded to atmospheric pressure last year, and they weren't going to do it again. The frown of a sulky July day wouldn't dampen their ardor any, albeit the showers of the self-same day might wet their skins. Each individual grasped his trusty umbrella and blessed the day he first beheld it in the lonely corner where it had been forsaken by its natural guardian. The rain did fall, in accordance with the "tip" the weather had given Old Probs, and it timed its descent with the start-out of the first afternoon boat, so as to make generally epidemic, if possible, the dreaded malady of the blues. But a wilderness of umbrellas, raised their defiant domes to the dripping clouds, and under that protection a serene crowd wended its way to the appointed place. And they did wisely. They had nothing to look back to but a dreary day within doors, as they had advised their customers that no business would be done on that day. Ahead of them was the possibility that a fairly pleasant time might be spent. To put off the day might not mend matters. It would be certain to have the effect of lessening the number present, as many would refuse to lose a second afternoon. This was the lesson of last year.

The grocers, their salesmen and other help, their wives and children, the city grocery travelers and hosts of other friends, joined the throng that stood waiting for the boats, which plied at intervals of 35 minutes between Victoria Park and Yonge street wharf. The trip itself was a feature of the day that even a lowering sky could not make commonplace. While the sail itself was enjoyable, the opportunities it gave for the jolly good fellowship that springs spontaneously from a large company on pleasure bent were probably greater than if the weather had more attractions to draw attention from social enjoyment. Everybody seemed to be proof against the bored feeling that is the peculiar spell which a wet day can cast over a man.

The amusements of the picnickers were framed and cut out according to a programme that gave little time for dulness between events. All the contests were carried on with spirit and good humor, and the following are the events, with the winners :

The sports concluded with an exciting tug-of-war between a team captained by Robt. Barron and composed of A. R. Williamson, F. S. Roberts, W H. McCulloch, W. Binney, W. G. Sykes, A. G. Booth and K. H. Stewart, and a team composed of J. T. Gibson, captain, F. Johnson, R. Calhoun, R. Mills, W. F. Britton, A. J. Shaw and J. Sampson. Captain Barron's team won the prize.

As will be seen the prizes were many and handsome, for which the Association have to thank the following houses :

The Judges were F. J. Gibson, Toronto ; Adam Balantyne, John Ronan, and G. J. Smith, of Hamilton.

The last contingent of the pic-nickers gathered upon the wharf at 10 p.m., the hour when the Steinhoff was due to touch again for its latest trip. Three hundred trusting merry-makers had deferred their departure to that time, and then circumstances over which they had no control deferred it considerably longer. For the Steinhoff did not touch again. A vessel did glide past and the party made all the clamor and signals of distress it could, but the vessel kept its course, and the hearts of the forlorn pic-nickers sank as the lights of the vessel became swallowed up in the darkness. Thick fog enveloped the weary waiters and rain began to fall. Some betook themselves to the highway to walk to the street car terminus, a mile and a half away, if haply they might get there before the street cars had got to their time terminus, and would have ceased running for the day. Some got home one way, some another, but the last 300 had a long day of it.

IS THE SALESMAN YOUR FRIEND?

What wonder if it occurs to the retail dealer that it is a good thing to number the traveling salesmen among his best friends. Their acquaintance can certainly be used to good advantage by careful, thoughtful, shrewd traders. We do not mean that it may be taken advantage of, or that friendliness with a salesman may be the cover for squeezing him down to the last farthing in his prices. That would be unjust to the salesman, and, in the end, to the disadvantage of the trader.

In the first place, have you his confidence? Does he feel when he enters your store that he is not going to be browbeaten or treated as if he were an intruder; that his goods are not going to be made the scapegoat for all the offences of which the clerks in his employer's store may be guilty; that he is not to be blamed because the last shipment did not arrive until fifteen days after it was due?

Such things are calculated to take all the confidence and starch out of a man in about two minutes. Don't you think if you greeted him pleasantly with a few words as to his health, what district he had been in last, what the business prospects were there and asked him what he had new to offer he would be more apt to give you closer attention and perhaps a little better prices than he gave a few moments before to your competitor who treated him differently?

We do not forget that there are drummers and drummers; that some of them ought to be hoeing potatoes or pounding rocks. The drummer we refer to is the man who knows his business; who knows how and when to approach a merchant; who does not offer goods that are not what the merchant wants; who can tell when his customer would like to have a good story, and when not; who knows enough to have his story clean. No man has any great respect for the narrator of nasty stories, although he may laugh at the time, and the traveler who desires the esteem and good will of the best merchants avoids that style of entertaining them.

The drummer we refer to always has his samples neat and clean. He can generally give you a price the moment it is asked for, and is not afraid to tell you what the prospects are on a certain line of goods even if it should be against himself, for he is smart enough to know that it does not pay to deceive a customer.

It pays to treat that kind of a drummer well. If there is a bargian in his sample case he is apt to save it for the man who does so. He will take special pains to see that the order is filled promptly and exactly as wanted. He will not put in a case or more of something for you to try just as an "opener for that item." He will see that your goods are sent by the cheapest route and do many little favors that are really worth something.

A very amusing instance was told us where a few weeks ago a salesman, anxious to please the customer by prompt shipment, wrote on a slip of paper "Ship——'s order quick. He is the biggest kicker in the State." This he pinned to the order and it was allowed to remain there for the benefit of the shipping and bill clerks. The bill clerk thought it a good idea to leave it for the benefit of the mail clerk, who evidently did not think anything at all about it, for he sent the bill off with this slip pinned to it. As a result, the next time the drummer came around, Mr.——wanted to know what he meant by such remarks, but at the same time it pleased him so well that he gave the drummer another order. He appreciated the fact that his interests were being looked after.

We claim, therefore, that it pays to treat traveling salesmen with some consideration. As a rule they are a hardworking, intelligent set of men, who labor under many discouragements, away from home most of the time, needing a cheerful word of sympathy and encouragement, for all of which they are willing to pay the very heaviest kind of interest in a solicitous anxiety for the best interests of those who favor them with a share of their orders.

Of course it is impossible to give an order to every salesman who comes along, but a kind word, a pleasant request to be excused from ordering anything that day, and cheery good-by, are capital which is bound to bring you good returns.—American Grocer.

THE MAN MAKES THE BUSINESS.

While the above heading is true to the letter, there is no doubt whatever that other contingencies are necessary in order to make or build up a successful business. But if all the other conditions are rolled into one they have not so much real, true influence upon the success or failure of a business as the individual who directs it. No matter how good the situation of the business may be, how much capital there is at the disposal of the individual, or how many other advantages he may have, none of these will be fully taken advantage of if the man who is directing the affairs is not able to fully develop them. How many men have succeeded where others have failed? We have known more than one case where men have taken hold of a business that has been considered worthless, yet through originality, hard work, intelligence and well directed energy built upon the ruins an admirable and lucrative trade. It is positively amazing when you come to consider what influence the head of a concern has upon a business. It is not only in devising and scheming how it shall be carried on, not only in directing and executing the ideas which are formed, but in influencing the spirit of the employes and thus getting every advantage that it is possible to obtain.

It is not the minister of religion who is introduced into the pulpit with the greatest forms or under the most advantageous circumstances who has the greatest influence for good or who has the capacity to draw about him the largest congregation. The fact is that history has proved time and time again that it is the one who has the least advantages to commence with who generally blossoms out into the greatest leader. No matter whether we take this country or the older countries, the story is the same. The Beechers, the Talmages, the Spurgeons, the Luthers, and many others too numerous to mention have sprung up from the ranks, commencing at the bottom and building up fame.

If we look back into history we shall also find that the greatest generals have, the same as the greatest preachers, been their own architects. In it possibly more necessary in a general than in any one else that his individuality should be of a character that should inspire confidence and command respect. It is the individuality of the general which is capable of seizing the opportunities and turning defeat into victory. Self-reliance, careful and earnest work, courage and honesty are absolutely necessary.

It is the same in business as it is with the pulpit and the battlefield. If the individual is not indowed with the capacities necessary for pushing and conducting a business profitably, then success is very doubtful indeed. In every case where success has crowned the efforts of business men, there has always been a capacity to make every opportunity contribute to the success. We do not say that it is impossible for successful business men to err, for that would be a stretch of the imagination. All make mistakes, but the more successful a business man is the fewer of these mistakes can be credited to him. Every opportunity that is allowed to pass by is a grave mistake, for there is no telling what it might have led to. Small things often lead to great results. Be careful, therefore, that no opportunity shall pass without it contributing its quota to your success.— National Grocer.

BUSINESS TENACITY.

The temptation to abandon one vocation for another is greatly increased by the false lights in which you see other people's work, and other people's circumstances. Most men prosper to their neighbors, who see only their mode of life, and their expenditures, knowing nothing of their toil or of the economy which they find it necessary to practice in private. So, too, every man's work seems easier and more agreeable than our own, simply because we see it from the outside, knowing nothing of the drudgery incident to it, the difficulty of doing it or the poverty of its results as its doer knows them. Of our own work we tire now and then, and when we do we exaggerate its difficulty and disagreeable things attending it. Its results are much smaller than we had hoped, perhaps, and we naturally assume that they are smaller than those obtained by our neighbor. We draw unjust comparisons between his lot or his work and our own, knowing our own perfectly and his imperfectly. Now it is a well ascertained fact that the profits of different handicrafts do not materially vary from one standard, and it is safe to say that there is no great difference between the net results of all the different vocations open to any one man. In other words, every man's money making power is limited by his character, his intellectual capacity, his education and his capital. These enable him to follow any one of certain vocations, and his earnings will be substantially the same whether he adopt one or another of the callings thus open to him. What the result would be if he had a larger capital, or a better education, or greater capacity, and so were fitted for some business which he cannot follow at all as he is, it is not worth while to inquire. Such as he is, he is capable of making a certain amount of money, and he could hardly increase the amount if his business were other than it is. To change, therefore, from one of the businesses open to him to another which cannot pay better, it is useless in any case, and, when the change is from a calling in which the man is an expert to one in which he is a mere tryo, it is mere folly. And yet changes of this kind are made every day by men who seriously hope to better their conditions in this way. Now and then one does benefit himself by such a change, and this fact serves to tempt others all the more strongly. But cases of this kind are rare exceptions to a well-nigh universal rule, and when they occur at all, there is nearly always some factor involved which is not common to all other cases at all. The man has some special fitness for the new undertaking, or was in some way specially unfitted for the old ; or he is a man of more than ordinary versatility; or he has entered upon his new calling under peculiarly favorable auspices ; or, as is sometimes the case, pure accident has come to his assistance. Whatever the cause of his success may be, it is exceptional, and in no way affects the rule that it is always dangerous and often disastrous to change from one vocation to another.—B. C. Commercial Journal.

SALMON IN GLASS.

An extremely interesting experiment has been proceeding at the Bon Accord Salmon Cannery during the past week, namely, the packing of salmon in glass jars. The glass jars were manufactured in England, and are of the capacity of an ordinary one-pound can. They are rendered air tight by an appliance similar to that used in fruit preserving jars, a zinc screw cap fitting over a rim of rubber in such a manner that the zinc and rubber do not come into contact with the fish. The cooking process is performed in precisely similar manner to that employed in ordinary canning, a puncture or "blowhole" being left in the glass cap. After the cooking is finished, this puncture is closed with sealing wax. The experiment is regarded as highly successful, the only drawback being the cracking of some of the jars occasioned by the sudden change of temperature upon being removed from the oven. It is believed, however, that this will be wholly obviated by the use of another description of glass. In all, some 15 or 20 cases were put up, and these will be shipped to the old country. Fish packed in this manner would cost about 50 per cent. more than the ordinary canned article to the consumer, but they would command a ready sale among a class of people to whom the extra cost would be no obstacle in purchasing. There has always been a more or less pronounced antipathy in England to canned goods, and though it is perhaps felt less now than at any time heretofore, owing to the uniform excellence of the Fraser River pack, still there is a considerable section of the more wealthy class of people who would always give the preference to fish preserved in glass.

The barque Guy C. Goss; with a cargo of $500,000 worth of tea, dropped anchor at Tocoma, on Saturday, 44 days from Yokohama, long overdue. When 15 days out, "Tom" Hiskiaski, a Japanese sailor, mounted to the topsail to reef it during a gale. A lurch of the vessel threw him headlong into the sea, and he was seen suddenly to disappear. The lifeboat was put out, but no trace of the missing sailor was found. When returning to the vessel, a whale rose to the surface. The crew then suspected what had become of Hiskiaski. The whale seemed to be in great disress. Suddenly, after a violent convulsion, Hiskiaski was thrown from the whale's mouth onto the crest of a wave and upon the deck of the Goss. He was unconscious and badly injured. Careful nursing brought him around, and he is now in his normal health. Capt. Mallette vouches for the truth of this story, and the sailor was pointed out.

The stock of Mr. M. Robertson, grocer St. Thomas, Ont., was sold on Saturday by auction to Mr. W. Trott, at 41 cents on the dollar.

The Vancouver Sugar Refinery Company expect to have their new works ready for operation in December. The capacity will be 250 barrels per day.

The grocers of St. John, N. B., held a meeting and decided in regard to closing at 7 p.m. the year round, to refer the matter to the various trades unions.

P. C. Larkin & Co. have now everything in ship-shape in their new premises at No. 25 Front street east, Toronto, whither they transferred themselves from their former place of business on Colborne street. They have got through the reconstruction confusion incidental to every moving, with unusual despatch, though all the while, like all the other wholesale grocers, they were fairly besieged with orders for sugar.

The merchants of Middlemiss have drawn up and signed an agreement to the effect that the stores will be closed three nights a week, viz., Monday, Wednesday and Friday, at 8 o'clock sharp.

Arthur V. Rose and W. A. Clark have dissolved the partnership under which they carried on business as fruitiers and general merchants in Vancouver, B. C. M. Clark continues the business.

Mr. W. H. Seyler has forsaken his accustomed place in the sample room of Eby, Blain & Co., and is seeking in rural solitudes a little of that peace to which his poetic soul has been a stranger since the Budget came down. He will soon be back.

Trade on the Pacific coast is being opened up quite early this year, the travelers of Toronto houses doing business there having departed some days ago. A large season's trade is anticipated.

The Montreal representatives of foreign houses are on the market with fine liquors ealier than usuul this year. The goods of John de Kuyper & Son, Rotterdam; Martell & Co., Cognac, and E. & J. Burke, Dublin and Liverpool, are now offering.

The early closing movement in Aylmer is about given up already. Most of the merchants make a pretence at closing, but the key is often left in the door, and the proprietor may be seen standing a few feet away. enjoying the pleasure of an evening's outing. —Aylmer Express.

Thomas G. Somerville, general merchant, of Fitzroy, made an assignment on Monday to Messrs. Mutchmor & Gordon. The assets are about $2,000 and the liabilities about the same amount. His creditors will meet at 3 o'clock, on August 5th, in Messrs. Mutchmor & Gordon's office.

G. Hector Clemes, representing the J. B. McLean Co., of Toronto, trade journal publishers, was in Winnipeg last week, and will make a trip as far as the coast, in the interest of the four trade journals published by the company, the best known of which is probably the CANADIAN GROCER.—Winnipeg Commercial.

The Canadian Salt Association has reduced the prices of salt. Notice has been given that the price of fine or coarse salt, in carload lots, will be 85 cents per barrel, free on board cars at point of shipment. The price of coarse salt was formerly $1.10 per barrel. It sells now in the United States at 60 cents a barrel.

A meeting of the creditors of Mr. St. Pierre, insolvent general merchant, of Sarsfield, Ont., was held Saturday in Mr. Larsmonth's office. The inspectors are Messrs. J. M. Garland, John McLean and W. Lesperance of Montreal. Mr. Larmonth was confirmed as assignee. The insolvent made an offer of about 25 cents on the dollar to his creditors. It was not accepted and the assignee was instructed to sell the estate.

The Montreal Exposition Company has issued its circular announcing the 17th to the 25th of September, as the time of its next Exhibition. The Company proposes to make the Exhibition an annual event in the agricultural and industrial life of the Province of Quebec. Arrangements have been made for a large exhibit in all lines.

Belgian butter is now sent to China via the Canadian Pacific railway. The time is not far distant when a large butter trade will be done with the East from the Canadian Pacific coast. What portion of this trade will be in Canadian butter depends on Canada learning to make the class of butter that will stand the voyage and suit the market.

Lucas, Park & Co., of Hamilton, have a second shipment of the "Under Two Flags" Japan tea on the G. C. Goss. Her passage of 44 days was a long one. The now celebrated Tom His Kiaski was one of her crew. Messrs. Lucas, Park & Co. still claim to fill all customers' sugar orders promptly and have no back orders on hand.

Mr. James C. Fraser, of Liverpool, Eng., accompanied by Mr. Robert Munroe, of Montreal, both of whom are directors of the Woodside Sugar Refinery, near Halifax, paid a joint visit to the new refinery there. Upon their return to Montreal they report business very brisk and have no doubt that the old country capitalists, who have purchased this refinery, will be well pleased with their investment. Under vigorous management, only the finest quality of goods will be made. The Woodside brand has already been shipped to every distributing point, where there are jobbers, in the Dominion. It need scarcely be said that the shareholders are elated at the warm reception the Woodside sugars have met with.

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, July 30, 1891.

GROCERIES.

There is little versatility about trade these days. One week is the counterpart of another, the supreme demand for sugar causing a monotony of dulness in nearly all other lines and incessant activity in that one line. There is a general disposition to look ahead hopefully and anticipate a good fall trade, which reports of the crops just now warrant. The weather, too, is favorable to the taking off of the harvest, and a better spirit is prevailing in the country. At present money is not found to be over-plentiful, current expenses for help, etc., in the fields, taking up the ready money of the farmers. Engagements are met with reasonable promptness.

CANNED GOODS.

There is small danger of an eclipse in the canned goods market owing to any conjunction between old and new stocks. Goods of the '90 pack will leave the horizon pretty clear for the advent of the new pack. What few tomatoes are yet to be had are very firmly held at $1.60. That price was quoted to an outside jobber who made an inquiry that included nearly all the goods on this market. Corn and peas are unchanged. What interest there is in the market is bestowed almost entirely on future business, which elicits increasing enquiry every day. The basis for vegetables is pretty firm at $1.05. An offer of $1 by a local jobber for a 2,000-case lot of tomatoes was declined. Though there is more active enquiry now than there was a week ago there is not yet so brisk a movement of orders for future goods, probably the sugar business engrosses too much attention for the usual amount to be given to canned goods. A small lot of new peas to sell at $1.15 has been received by a few houses, but there is no eagerness to push business in them till the peas are matured goods. In future salmon the jobbers are moving upon the market very warily. Their past experience inclines them to put upon the canners the carrying of the stock to a greater extent than heretofore. The canners report a short run. There is an advance in the price of Clover Leaf Lobster to $2.95, the canners stating that storms and the attacks of warships along the Newfoundland coast have precluded the possibility of realizing half a pack. They are withholding fully one-half of the quantity contracted for by the local house which handles the brand.

Authentic private advices received on Monday morning from Victoria, B.C., say: "The reports from the north are that the run so far has been a failure. No fish on Nash or Albert bay, few on River's inlet and only fair on Skeena, while on the Fraser river they are away below the mark. Salmon dealers here seem anxious to buy now in anticipation of a rise."

Sloan & Crowther received their first car of Clover Leaf lobster on Monday,

COFFEE.

Dulness continues. The demand has no energy in it, but prices are firm, particularly in Javas, fine grades of which cannot be jobbed out under 30c. An outside advance is the cause.

The New York Commercial Bulletin of Monday, says: The market for Brazils has kept in very good shape all this week, developing a fair business, gaining a little in price, and strengthening the convictions of those who believe that the selling side must carry the advantage without difficulty well into the fall months. Buyers have not taken hold with quite the avidity that might be deemed thouroughly satisfactory by the more sanguine, but holders claim to feel greatly encouraged, especially upon the better qualities likely to become available for early delivery, and express the usual determination to carry. Exactly how the speculative element feels it is difficult to determine, in view of the flatly contradictory statements at times to be heard, and the variable policy pursued. In a general way, however, the bulls have carried most of the advantages, and forced a considerable covering, especially upon nearby months. To-day the turn was rather in an opposite direction, and buyers had the advantage throughout. The local bull element did not appear to be either aggressive or even very greatly on the defensive, and with Europe inclined to sell, rates settled and left final figures 5 to 15 points off. On the street there was light trading, and to some extent a nominal tone, though holders claiming to ask full former rates, with much firmness, and making only a moderate offering. Sales are reported of 250 bags well-dried No. 8 at 17 3-8c from near-by steamer, and 500 bags No. 7 at 17c. per Catainia. European advices were tame to-day, with Brazilian accounts somewhat ambiguous, though evidences pointed to continued weakness in sterling exchange, and some of the trade had an idea that some sort of financial trouble may be brewing.

DRIED FRUIT.

This week's trade adds no new features to those which have been made familiar by the past few weeks reports. Trade is moderately good, the harvest season awakening a considerable demand, which the easy prices of Valencia raisins have seconded. These are still plentiful and cheap at 4½ to 6c. Currants have not relapsed from the firmness which the last advance in New York imparted to their position. They quote at 6¼ to 6½c. for barrels and 6⅜ to 6¾c. in half barrels. Other grades are unchanged. Prunes are weak at 6½ and upwards for cases.

From Denia reports of the Valencia raisin crop by private communication are to the effect that favorable weather is being experienced, that the bunches of berries are thriving, and that the total yield will probably not reach 700,000 quintals, or about 200,000 quintals less than last year. Prices are expected to rule low. The opening price promises not to exceed, and perhaps not reach, that of a year ago. The gathering will begin on the 10th of August.

Cable advices from Patras quote prices on new currants on about a parity with those of last year's opening market.

NUTS.

The usual off and on trade in nuts goes on. Stocks are light and prices steady. A slightly better demand rules this week than was operative a week ago.

Ferd, Ballerd & Co., Messina, advise importers here that a very active United States demand for filberts has caused an advance in the price of about 10s. on last month's qnotations. They are reported to be fully one-third short of last year's supply.

RICE AND SPICES.

A good demand for rice subsists, and Aracan is firmer under its action a3⅞ to 4c., the contract price being $3.70 at the mills. Spices are featureless, the usual domestic consumption keeping the market going.

Perkins, Ince & Co. have received a direct shipment of Japan rice, ex s. s. Empress of India. It is imported ready milled.

SUGAR.

There have been no lulls in the demand for sugar. The demend, indeed, is not so much a matter of to-day as is the clamor from all parts about delay on the part of the supply. A very large part of the contracts for sugar now wanted was recorded a few days after the duty was taken off, that event having precipitated a demand made voracious by long previous fasting, as it were, and further sharpened by the promise of the fruit crops. There is a new demand springing up every day though trying to get orders in edgewise between some of those of long standing, but those fare poorly who had n t ordered early in the month at latest. Some jobbers in their eagerness to get granulated for their customers and in their despair of getting any for some time from the refiners have offered above the list price to get temporary supplies from their neighbors on the street. The situation was somewhat relieved on Monday, when supplies of Grocers' A, long off this market, were received to supplement the quantity of granulated here. It proved an acceptable substitute, being only a grade inferior to granulated and selling ⅛c. lower. It had pretty well gone out of trade during the past few years, the small difference between it and granulated determining the popular choice in favor of the latter. The pans being idle the refiners could keep them into use simultaneously with those for producing granulated. Raws have also come in to help out yellows but they were less needed for that purpose, as there is no appreciable deficit of yellow. There is a demand for raws, however, at 3⅞

to 4c., which takes them off the market rapidly. Granulated quotes at 5⅛c. for less than 15 barrels, and 5c. for not less than 15 barrels. Grocers' A quotes ⅛c. below these prices, that is at 5c. for less than 15 barrel lots, and 4⅞c. for not less than 15 barrel lots. Yellows are firm 4c. upwards. Raws are 3⅞ to 4c. The grades of raw in stock are very dark.

The Moncton refinery is quoting once more, it having withdrawn quotations some time ago on account of not being able to fill orders beyond those in hand. Its price at the refinery is 4½c net cash.

The Montreal refineries are evidently doing their best to satisfy the demand. One house here received an invoice from one of them dated on Sunday last. They are working all the time.

Willet & Gray in their weekly report from New York say: A mysterious quietness has brooded over the refined market this week which will require a little waiting to explain. Refiners were so confident that the demand of the season had set in that they felt their way towards a further advance of 1-16c, but, to their disappointment, they find they were over sanguine, and have been obliged to abandon the attempt to advance prices at this time. The country seems to be able to get along with the very full supplies which are now being turned out, which are evidently a little in excess of the obsorbing power, which is probably the real reason of the apparent present dulness of the refined sugar trade, which is evidently more apparent than real, judging by the figures of consumption now going on, and the demand only needs a little time to catch up to refiners' extreme expectations, as shown by their disposition to constant over-production.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

Not much activity characterizes this department, the time of year not propitious. Low grade syrups would sell if they could be supplied. Molasses is in some request, fine table grade of New Orleans being somewhat active at about 55c. West Indies stock moves slowly.

Syrups from the new Vancouver refinery are offering freely on this market at 2¾ to 3½c.

TEAS.

The big sugar movement has been somewhat adverse to the tea market, which is usually more active at this time of year than it is at present. Interest in it has begun to open up, however, and drawing has begun to be a feature of the activity in sample rooms. Consignments of New Darjeelings will be here soon. Japans as low as 17 to 18c. are on hand and in very good request. Young Hysons are wanted, but of course cannot be supplied.

The latest private advices from Calcutta report a good demand for all grades of Indian except medium Pekoe Souchongs, which sold rather in buyers' favor. Even-leaf Pekoes, without much liquor, are wanted for Bombay at enhanced values. Fine parcels are very scarce. The few good liquoring invoices sell readily.

PETROLEUM.

Local prices quote on last week's basis. Business is considered good for the season, as it is expected to be its quietest in midsummer.

The Petrolia Advertiser reports: Petrolia crude $1.31 per bbl., Oil Springs crude $1.31 per bbl. There is nothing of importance to report this week. Business is quiet on 'Change. Above quotations were the closing prices yesterday. Refined is unchanged and may be quoted at 12½ to 13c. f.o.b. here.

DRUGS AND CHEMICALS.

The cool weather has flattened trade in seasonable goods. Flies are not plentiful, plant insects are not particularly numerous and the call for summer beverages is not up to the average in this rather dry, cool weather. Quinine runs from 25 to 38c. There is no other change in prices.

The United Alkali Company, which controls, with one exception, the whole of the British chemical trade, has withdrawn quotations for bleach. This will affect the paper-making industry somewhat, as withdrawal is generally equivalent to a warning that an advance will be made.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

The butter market is dull. The best western dairy goes off readily but the highest price paid, and that rarely, is 15c. The ruling quotation for choice dairy is 14c. There is no excess of that class. What keeps prices heavy for it is the fact that other grades of butter only a few removes below the best abound, and as they make a fairly acceptable substitute for the best, consumption would betake itself to them and neglect the best were any movement made to advance prices on the latter. Medium grades range from 11½ to 13c. common from 9 to 11c. Creamery butter is not favored with demand it had last year. Houses that averaged 1000 lbs. of rolls for every day's sales last July find it up-hill work to get rid of 300 lbs. per day, and have had to have their supplies from the factories reduced. The prices is 21 to 23c. Creamery tubs are nearly lifeless. Prices are slow and supplies so liberal in dairy tub that this market offers a poor opening to creamery tub at 19c.

Cheese is firm at 9 to 9½c., with a quarter higher now and then quoted.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

BEANS—A revived inquiry for beans fails to bring any additions of consequence to the small stock upon the market, which is firm at $1.70 to $1.80.

DRIED APPLES—Are lifeless at 8½ to 9c.

EVAPORATED APPLES—Are seldom called for, while a fair amount of stock offers at 13½ to 14c.

EGGS—The market has weakened to 13 and 13½c. Several houses were overstocked and came to the lower figure for relief, as they considered any excess undesirable in summer weather. Coolness has shortened receipts somewhat and favored the possibility of firmer prices.

HAY—All that comes baled is taken at $11.50 to $12, but there is only a limited quantity moving. On the part of both the supply and the demand there is a disposition to await advantageous developments.

GREEN FRUIT.

Cool weather has been against activity in the green fruit market, particularly in the sale of lemons. These have gone down in consequence to $4.75 and $5. Oranges sell at $4.50 for Sarrentos and $7.50 for Rodis. Bananas are $1.75 to $2 for firsts and $1.25 for seconds. They are slow of sale and plentiful.

Small fruits are plentiful in all lines but cherries, which are about done. Red raspberries are 8½c., black are 8 to 8½c., gooseberries $1 to $1.25, red currants $1 to $1.25, black currants $1.50 to $1.75. California fruit had a good week of it. Peaches went out at $2.50 to $2.75 for Crawfords, purple Duane and Washington plums at $2.50, German prunes at $3.25, Bartlett pears at $3.50 to $4, California grapes at $3 to $3.50. Tomatoes are plentiful at $1 to $1.15, a few Canadian being received. Watermelons are becoming a drug on the market at 15 to 20c. A great many have been shipped here. Cucumbers are 40 to 50c. per doz.

PROVISIONS.

Round lots are not the order of the week, but a very brisk jobbing trade is. In this way a considerable quantity of products has gone out within the week, and it makes a very perceptible diminution in local stocks, which are getting light in smoked meats, hams particularly, in long clear bacon, and almost depleted in heavy mess.

BACON—Long clear is firm at 8¼c., bellies at 10½ to 11c., an advance of ½c., backs at 11 to 11½c. or an advance of 1c., rolls at 8½ to 9c.

HAMS—Smoked are very scarce, and have gone up to 12c. firm. The season of most active demand is yet ahead, so that prices are immoveable. In sympathy with smoked, sweet pickled are firm and higher, quoting at 10 to 11c.

LARD—Canadian in tubs is 10c., in pails 10½c. Not more than two houses have stock which is firmly held. Compound is 8½ to 9c.

MESS PORK—is all but out of stock, at $15 for heavy and $16.50 for short cut.

SALT.

The demand for salt has fallen off somewhat. Haying caused quite a demand for coarse, and butter-making for the firm grades, as well as meats that could not be consumed while fresh. Two cars of barrel salt moved off at $1.20, 2 cars of sacks at 70c., and a car of dairy at $1.25.

DRY GOODS.

One week resembles another very closely in the midsummer dry goods market. Trade shows no new aspect with this week. There is some sorting up going on, and encouragement from reports of the crops in the country.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, July 28, 1891.

There has been another favorable week to report in the grocery trade, most lines showing a fair movement, while the activity in sugar has continued, and values have a firmer tendency. Further business, out of first hands, is also to be noted in dried fruits, coffees, etc., indicating pretty plainly that jobbers are having a good call from their customers or have good reason for expecting it. On the whole the situation continues quite as favorable.

SUGAR AND SYRUP.

The brisk movement in this article continues—the refiners doing the best they can for their customers. Granulated is quoted very firm, 4⅝ being the figure, but values have a firmer tendency while yellows are stiff at 4 to 4¼c. The raw sugar to which we referred in our last is very bright crystal stock and is held at 4½c. while there has been some business in dark Barbadoes at 3⅞c.

Syrups are firm with a better enquiry, bright stock selling freely at 3c.

MOLASSES.

No further business in a large way is reported in molasses, but there are several round lots on the market to be moved at 40c. We quote 42c. for jobbing business.

TEAS.

The market presents a fair share of activity, mainly on Western accounts, while advices from New York indicate a much stronger tendency. Offerings of low grade here are small. In consequence of the clearing up of the English market for new crop a considerable quantity of black's are coming this way, but the demand is satisfactory.

CANNED GOODS.

There is only a quiet trade in canned goods this week but stocks are well reduced and a good healthy business is expected in the fall. With the uncertainty of values on sugar, contracts for fruit are few until the basis is more firmly established. In fish, lobsters are firm under light offerings, and present stocks of tomatoes having run low jobbers are asking more, $1.60 to $1.65 being the range.

COFFEES AND SPICES.

The coffee market has continued fairly active since our last, with supplies kept in small proportions. A fair turn over of Rios is to be noted at 20 to 21c., with Jamaicas about the same. Spices continue quiet, but there has been some business in black pepper out of first hands at 10c. Other spices present no features.

DRIED FRUIT.

There has been an active movement from first hands in this branch of trade, both in currants and raisins. The latter are well reduced, some holders being entirely sold out, while round quantities of currants have been turned over during the week. Barrel stock moved freely at 5⅞c., and cases at 6 to 6⅛c., according to quality. Raisins are adopting a firmer tone, and as noted last week the stock of the principal holder has been further reduced, and now nothing really prime can be had under 4c., which is only for round lots, while we quote 4 to 4¼c. as a range. Advices from New York display the same firm tone, stock there being bought up on speculative account, and there is little to be had.

GREEN FRUIT.

There is the usual sort of trade doing in green fruit with nothing particular to say. Oranges are unchanged at $6 to $7 per case, while lemons are somewhat lower at $4 to $5 per box. Pineapples, bananas, etc., are unchanged.

FISH.

This market remains quiet and featureless, with only a jobbing business to note. The coming month will probably see some fair receipts of new stock and more will be doing.

HOPS.

There is no change locally in this article since our last, and the spot market is a purely nominal one. About 20c. is the idea for stock.

PROVISIONS.

There is a fair demand reported for provisions. Packers and holders of pork are very firm in their views, the price of short cut being advanced to $17 to $17.25 per bbl. Canadian short cut, per barrel, $17.00 to $17.25; mess pork, western, per barrel $15.00 to $15.50; short cut, western, per brl $17.00 to $17.25; hams, city cured, per pound 10 to 11c.; hams, canvassed, per lb 0 00 to 0 00c.; lard, Canadian, in pails, 8¾ to 9c.; bacon, per pound, 9 to 10c.; lard, com., refined, per lb, 7¾ to 8c.

EGGS.

There has been no change in this market since our last and prices have maintained a steady level throughout. The demand continues very satisfactory and prices are the same at 12½ to 13c.

BUTTER.

Our remarks of a week ago may be repeated in connection with this market for there has been no alteration whatever. News from different parts of the country indicate that the stock is being held in first hands for extreme figures, consequently the movement aside from the jobbing demand on local account is restricted. Creamery 18 to 19c., townships dairy 16 to 18c., Morrisburg and Brockville 16 to 17c., western dairy 14 to 15c.

CHEESE.

After the activity of the previous week we have now a rather quiet market but prices are steady. There is a disposition for business at about present values but the danger is in the fact that the factorymen are disposed to wring entreme figures out of buyers. With the Britisher as he feels at present this is quite as likely to check the demand as not. We quote: Finest colored 8⅞ to 9c., finest white 8⅝ to 8¾c., fine 8⅜ to 8½c., medium 8¼ to 8⅜, cable 44s.

GRAIN.

The demand for grain continues small. Oats are easier in the West, being quoted at 53c, and sales have been made for spot account at some concession. The stocks in store show a decrease of 15,890 bushels of wheat, 2,704 bushels of corn, 11,863 bushels of peas, 2,417 bushels of oats, and an increase of 7,028 bushels of barley compared with a week ago. Compared with the same period last year there is an increase of 284-

963 bushels of wheat, 994 bushels of oats, 1,146 bushels of rye and a decrease of 58,079 bushels of corn, 119,702 bushels of peas and 6,990 bushels of barley. We quote:—No. 1 hard Manitoba, $0 ; No. 2 do., $1.10 ; to $1.12; No. 3 do., 99c ; No. 2 Northern, $1.01 to $1.03 ; feed do., 70c; peas 90c. per 66 pounds in store; 91c. afloat; Manitoba oats; 51c. to 52c.; Upper Canada do., do., 55c. per 34 pounds; corn, 72c.to 75c. duty paid; feed barley, 56c. to 58c; good malting do., 65c. to 67c.

FLOUR.

There is a fair local demand for flour, while some enquiry is noted on export account, although no sales have actually been made. The stock in store shows a further decrease of 4098 bbls. compared with a week ago, and 1310 bbls. compared with a year ago. Meal remains as before. Patent spring $5.50 to $0.00 patent winter $5.25 to $5.50; straight roller $4.90 to $5,00; extra $4.60 to $4.70; superfine $4.00 to $4.20; city strong bakers' $5.25 to $0.00; strong bakers' $5,00 to $5.20.

HALIFAX MARKET QUOTATIONS.

(Wholesale Selling Rates.)

HALIFAX, July 29, 1891.

BREADSTUFFS.—There is a better tone in the bread market. Wheat and corn have both advanced some 4 or 5c. per bushel. It looks like higher market. Stocks, we believe, are small for this season of the year.

Manitoba highest grade patents, $6.00 to 6.25 ; High grade patents, $5.60 to 5.75 ; Good 90 per cent Patents, $5.30 to 5.40 ; Straight grade, $5.10 to 5.20 ; Superior extras, $4.85 to 5.00 ; Good seconds, $4.55 to 4.65 ; Graham flour, $4.90 to 5.10 ; Oatmeal, $5.75; Oatmeal rolled,$6.15; Kiln dried cornmeal, $3 to 3.45 ; Rolled wheat, $5.50; Wheat bran per ton, $19 to 20 ; Shorts per ton $26 to 27 ; Middlings $27.50 to 28.50 ; Cracked corn, $35 ; Ground oil cake, $34 to $35 ; Moulee, $30 ; Split peas, $4.40 to $4.50 ; White beans per bushel, $1.80 to 2 ; Pot barley per barrel, $3.90 to 4.10 ; Canadian oats, choice quality, 60c. to 63c. ; Hay per ton, $11.75 to 13.

SUGAR.—The market for refined sugar is in exactly the position that it was last week. Refiners are using their best endeavors to distribute as impartially as possible the goods as they are manufactured in order to satisfy the urgency of the demand from all quarters.

Cut loaf, 5c. ; Granulated, 4½c. ; Circle A, 4¼c. ; White extra C, 4c. ; Standard, 3⅞c. to 4c.; Extra yellow C, 3¾c.; Yellow C, 3¾c.

MOLASSES.—The molasses market is very firm and the jobbing trade is fair. The receipts from the producing points are about all in now, and the trade can fix prices in proportion to the quantity "in sight."

Barbados, 40c. ; Demerara, 35 to 38c. ; Diamond N. 48c.; Porto Rico, 37 to 38c.; Trinidad, 34 to 35c. ; Antigua, 34 to 35.

FISH.—There has been nothing new locally in fish since our last report. Receipts continue to be meager and shipments small, and with the home consumptive demand very light the trade has a decidedly dull aspect. Quid have reported to have struck in Canso and the vicinity, and some vessels have baited, but the majority are obliged to still longer wait their chances.

Codfish, Hard C. B. $5 ; Western Shore, $4.50.

PROVISIONS.—Beef—Am. Ex. Mess, duty paid, $14.50 to 15. Am. Plate, $15 to 15.50. Am. Ex. Plate, $16 to 16.50.

Pork—Mess, American, $16.50 to $17 American clear, $18.50 to 19. P. E. I. Mess' $15 to 15.50. P. E. I. Thin Mess, $14 to 14.50. Prime Mess, $11.50 to 12.50. Lard, tubs and pails, P. E. Island, 12c. do American, 11c. to 12. Hams, P. E. I., Green, 10c. to 11.

ST. JOHN, N.B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N.B., July 29, 1891.

The scarcity of money here this past week has caused a general shrinkage of trade with both wholesalers and retailers, though we do not notice any change in the prices of groceries.

FLOUR—There is very little flour moving and that only in a jobbing way, with a not very encouraging outlook for improvement in the near future. Prices are unchanged from last week.

MEAL—Oatmeal is a shade easier ; there has been several lots offered here at $5.75 ex car, and buyers do not seem anxious to take.

CORN MEAL—A steady demand the past week with prices the same as last quoted, $3.35 to $3.45, is all that can be said about the corn meal market.

SALT—A cargo of Liverpool salt is now discharging. The price ex ship is from 55 to 60c. and is selling readily, as the market has been quite bare lately, large white sacks selling at $1.25 to $1.30.

MOLASSES—The only kind obtainable has been Barbadoes (until last week), and is selling at 38 to 39c. Some Porto Rico has arrived and is selling readily at 35 to 36c.

SUGARS.—The demand for sugar still keeps up, and is likely to for a few weeks, or until the small fruit season is over. The prices are unchanged. Granulated is 4⅝ to 4⅞c. Yellows 4 to 4⅜c.

EGGS—Are coming in more freely, though prices have not changed much, 12 to 13c. are the only figures.

POTATOES.—New potatoes are arriving in large quantities, and as a consequence prices have dropped from $2.75 per bbl. to $1.50, at which figure they are holding steady.

FISH.—Large cod are scarce and sell readily. Mediums are coming in in large quantities, and keeps the market well supplied. The present prices $3.60 to $3.75 for medium, and $4.25 to $4.40 for large. Pollock sell readily at $1.60 to $1.75.

NOTE.

Manks & Co., hatters, have been compelled to assign for the benefit of their creditors. Their liabilities were not known at the time of writing this.

THE TRADE BUYER AND THE SELLER COMPARED.

Perhaps in no department of trade is there unity of opinion regarding the relative merits and worth of buyer and seller. It is probable that there will always be differences of opinion on that point and strong reasoning in behalf of each.

To A. T. Stewart, the merchant prince, is credited the statement that a salesman was not very hard to find, and if not readily found, one could easily be trained up, but a buyer is a product of nature, that is to say a good buyer. Yet even this experienced judgment can hardly be said to apply in all cases. It may be and probably is, that the buyer is of supreme importance in his own department, but his relations to the public, even to the trade, are limited. The buyer of raw material for the manufacturer is not generally known outside of a comparitively small circle handling raw products. Even the buyer for the jobber, or purchasing agent as he is more generally termed, operates within a comparatively small circle of manufacturers or importers, although his dealings are of immense magnitude, larger by far than those of any salesman of like experience and standing. He is a factor in the market, yet in a limited sense and not as the purchaser who is himself a seller that directs and deals directly with the consumer. Necessarily, buyers are not so numerous as salesmen and for that reason alone are not so well known through all the ramnifications of trade and commerce down to the consumer.

Yet no one would underrate the importance of the seller to the trade at large nor deny that the successful salesman has acquired an art as of great value to himself and his employer as the buyer could possibly attain. To the student of human nature the salesman is a greater and more interesting study than the buyer, and this is true whether the art of selling is represented by the man behind the counter in the store or by the commercial traveler whose life is spent on the road. The successful salesman must himself be a student of human nature and a close observer of persons especially, the better to enable him to deal with his customer. Patience, caution and determination are also elements in the make up of a good salesman. It is difficult to realize the tax to which these characteristics are often subjected, especially the trait of patience. Customers are naturally unsympathetic and sometimes imagine it a special privilege to exact for themselves more than ordinary deference. But the salesman must take no umbrage—nor could a buyer under like circumstances—that's what he is there for, to sell if he can, but at all events not to antagonize the customer. The latter is especially true in retailing, and the storekeeper who is largely his own salesman, assisted it may be by one or two others, finds it especially incumbent on him to restrain himself, as so many have learned by unpleasant experience. —Stove and Hardware Reporter.

Competition is keen and active, and the only way to meet it successfully is to buy from the best houses, and at lowest prices.

"There are geniuses in trade, as well as in war, or the state, or letters; and the reason why this or that man is fortunate is not to be told. It lies in the man."—EMERSON.

SPECULATION CLOSES AN IDEAL ALL CASH STORE.

The widely prevalent theory or belief in storekeeping circles that selling for cash exclusively, must always result in success, says an exchange, received something of a knock out blow the other day in St. Louis, in the suspension of what may be called a fairly ideal cash establishment in the way of the retail grocery trade. It was conducted at least under an ideal system, with respect to selling exclusively for cash. No individual book accounts were kept, no charge of any sort made against the customer; the expense of booking and collecting current accounts was wholly done away with; and yet the system, perfect in theory, proved defective in practice The plan comprehended the retailing of wares at but a trifle above jobbers' prices, this policy, being possible, it was conducted through the C. O. D. system, for the cash was always collected on the delivery of the goods. Selling upon so close a margin the house soon secured and maintained for years a very large trade; one, of wholesale proportions, indeed. Ample capital was necessary and utilized, and was believed with large profit until a few days ago.

It is now shown that the system employed was as near perfection as was claimed for it, and had it been carried out in practice strictly on the theory upon which it was based, must have succeeded. But after all, business is comething of a humdium, the more so if a system is rigidly followed, and there is constant temptation, at least in the city trade, to travel outside of the lines of what sometimes becomes monotony.

In this instance, what the operators on 'Change would call "occasional flyers" were taken in the way of before-hand purchases of large lots of goods. So long as these deals were confined to staple wares in steady demand and within reasonable proportions, the effect was not especially detrimental to the current business of the house, although extensive speculating even in his own line of goods, can rarely be entered upon by the retailer, without injury to his current trade. The purchase of carload lots of goods at an opportune time may prove a profitable speculation, if confined to wares in regular and constant demand rather than fluctuating inquiry, but even then, there is danger of becoming habituated to speculation to the neglect of plain every day trade ; and the development of the speculative mania in the storekeeper is to be deplored.

So it proved in this instance. Speculation was itself made a specialty of and a single article having place in the general stock necessarily limited on account of its character, was pushed to the front, or "boomed" it might be said, at the expense of more staple goods. Now, while a specialty in any trade is often pushed with much advantage, it can be readily overdone, and this was the result here. The speculative transactions in this single article in demand as compared with the general stock in a proportion of less than one to fifteen, ultimately absorbed the profits of the more staple goods in stock and drained the large resources of the storekeeper to an extent compelling him to suspend operations. While not entirely going outside of the line of his regular business, he was forced to neglect the latter or to use it as a prop for the speculative article that was unable to stand alone. It was as if a hardward dealer, conceiving the idea of a possible extraordinary demand for monkey-wrenches had loaded himself up with a sufficient supply for three or four seasons at once, and to work off the excess was compelled to devote his sole attention to that effort to the exclusion of furthering the sale of other goods in current demand. In storekeeping the speculative and the strictly legitimate cannot go together long, one must ultimately fail. Such a result is inevitable, and therein lies the moral contained in the foregoing narration of the failure of a prosperous business. The country storekeeper is fortunate in being subject to less temptation than the city dealer to speculate, and hence is more likely to give exclusive attention to the current and legitimate demands of his trade.

THE CLOVE CROP.

News has reached London from Zanzibar purporting a heavy fall of rain in the clove districts, and speculation now is rife as to the effect the same will have on the growing crop. Some people seem to be of opinion that a heavy downpour could but prove most detrimental to the young struggling plants, and they therefore are inclined to believe in a short crop this season. Others, on the other hand, strongly pronounce in favor of the rain, considering it most beneficial to the growing crops, and they therefore anticipate another of those big yields as we have seen during the last five or six years. Judging, however, from the decline in value, both of spot and delivery cloves, we reluctantly come to the conclusion that the majority of people in the trade favor the latter opinion—another big picking. What a boon it would be to all interested in cloves if the majority were wrong, and if for once the long unbroken line of bumper crops would be broken, leaving us to face a short crop or even a downright failure. There would be no other country to take Zanzibar's place, for Penang and Amboyna, although producing better quality, have but comparatively small crops. Zanzibar is the only place where quantities are grown. Then there might be a chance for cloves to recover their enormous depreciation in value, caused alone by excessive shipments and wild speculation consequent upon heavy crops. Only five years ago our stocks were still small and fair Zanzibar readily fetched 11d. to 12d. per pound delivered, whereas to-day 3⅜d. per pound is about the value. Who can tell where prices will go to if, as the majority seem to believe, the fallen rain has improved the growing of young plants? Not only an unimportant little fluctuating market, but a steady decline, may with a certainty be forecast. The increase of shipments naturally commanded a greater amount of speculation, and every year business gained in dimensions. The old contract form for delivery was no longer deemed suitable, a modification appeared most desirable, and a meeting of the trade was arranged to declare the intended new contract as in force. However, although excellent in many points, and quite in accordance with the moving of the times, the proposal fell through owing to want of proper support. The promoters of the new contract, we feel sure, are by no means discouraged by their defeat; they will sooner or later renew their proposal, and being then properly supported, will carry the day.—London Com. Record.

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER, issued weekly, subscription price $2 00 per year.

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

The consumption of sugar in this country since the middle of last June far exceeds that of any former summer in our history. The high rate of activity at which it began has been steadily kept up, and the capacity of the demand could not have been more markedly increased by the sudden addition of a couple of millions to our population, than it has been by the real causes. Those causes are the removal of the duty and the uncommon yield of small fruits. It was expected that the cheapness of sugar would greatly expand the demand for small fruits and so make these dearer, but the fruits came to hand so much faster than the sugar did that prices ruled generally low for them. The process of the refiners was a slower one than the ripening process of nature. Yet the season was favorable to the sugar situation. There could not have been better weather. It was just sufficiently tempered by coolness to bring the large fruit crop into gradual maturity. In most summers the demand has a shorter spell of it, all classes of small fruits thronging together more closely, and making the necessity for sugar more urgent over the shorter space of time.

There is being more fruit put down this year by housewives throughout the country than there ever was before, as never before was the cost of raw material so cheap, and canning material was never cheaper. In this fact native canning houses have an extra inducement to look to an export trade for the better placing of their fruit output. There is a much more limited market for it at home than there ever was before, while the demand from Great Britain, Germany and some other countries has possibilities in it that will probably more than counterbalance the falling off of the home demand, and maintain a larger fruit-canning industry here. The possible direct and indirect effects of the removal of the sugar duty are many and interesting.

* * * *

One effect that might naturally be looked for to show itself before this is a distinct advance in the price of raw. With an average of nearly two cents a pound taken off the sugar consumed by the two English-speaking nations of this continent, a vast addition to the world's consumption is made, one that the stock of raw could scarcely be expected to be prepared for. Of course, the removal of the United States duty on the 1st of April last was not like the removal of ours on the 17th of June—a sudden step. It was provided for by a revision of the tariff that took general effect in the previous October. To a considerable extent the growers were therefore forewarned that an unusual consumption would rule this year, though as to Canada's part in the increase neither growers nor refiners could anticipate it, as the removal of the duty was not preceded by any announcement of the Government's intention in that respect.

* * * *

Another effect foreseen but, unlike the advance in price, now realized, is a larger importation of raw on the part of wholesale grocers. Though the price of yellow refined is very low there is a demand for raw, both of darker and brighter grades than the lowest refined. This has been responded to by stocks of Trinidad, Barbados and Demerara sugars which have been brought in in large quantities. The trade in these grades is not now at its best, the call for granulated monopolizing present attention, but there is likelihood that they will divide with yellows the trade which has heretofore fallen altogether to the latter. Here raw sugar is duty-free up to No. 14 Dutch standard, but in the United States it is free up to No. 16. If it were free up to the same limit in this country there is little doubt that yellow refined would be still lower with us or the lowest grades would not be turned out, as the rivalry of raw for cooking purposes would have odds against lowest grade yellows in popularity and in price. All the applications to which the cheaper sugar will be put, now that it is so very low priced, have probably not yet been anticipated. One that has come under observation more generally than ever before is its use in the dairy. Some butter-makers, to make their product retain its sweetness, or probably to impart sweetness where there was none inherent, add sugar nowadays. The nasal sense and the palate may both be pleased by the addition, but neither can be deceived by it.

* * * *

Despite the fact that an unprecedented demand has been experienced in the United States, the price of granulated has kept pretty steady in the New York market. United States consumption for the past half of this year has increased about 20 per cent. over that of the corresponding half of last year, and the sugar supplies of the world appear not to be in excess of those of a year ago. The stationary price of granulated in the face of these facts seems inexplicable upon any other theory than that the United States refiners aim to keep down the price of raw. Prices here cannot well go up until a pending contracts are filled.

HOG PRODUCTS.

The market is approaching its usual summer bareness in hog products. Heavy mess pork is all but done, whether of Canadian or United States packing. Long clear bacon is getting low, and stocks will soon have to be replenished by importation, that being an annual necessity at this time of year. Smoked meats are in limited compass, a shortage being foreshadowed in hams especially. Pure lard is becoming a scarce article, being in slender stock and divided among only two or three holders. The situation of the market for all hog products is, so far as internal circumstances determine it, unusually strong. Outside influences are at one with inside conditions, and if this market were strictly in sympathy with that of Chicago, there would be a considerable advance in most lines, in long clear perhaps more than in anything else. The price at which the various products can be imported now are much higher than those at which provision houses here are selling.

The consumption of long clear bacon in summer is very large. It shares with smoked meats the position of equivalent for fresh meats where the supply cannot be laid in daily. The cheapness makes it a substitute for these even where they are easily available, and as well gets it a part of the summer consumption, many people using it because it is cheaper than smoked meats. The laboring classes and the farmers maintain the demand for it.

New supplies will begin to be put in cure to replenish the stocks of smoked meats in about a month. They will, however, not be converted into smoked meats for about 60 days after they are cut up. Already the market for dressed hogs is beginning to assume its preliminary features. Outsiders are offering rail lots but at high prices, their attitude so far being firm for $7.50. But before new smoked stock can be got ready for trade there will be great scarcity here.

THE BUTTER MARKET.

The lethargy which now holds the butter market as in a spell, is not unlikely to be a ruling feature for some time. The low prices going have been current for many weeks. One of two effects low prices in summer always have. They either lead to accumulation at central points like Toronto, or they cause a falling off of supplies from the country stores where butter is collected —in other words, they cause accumulation among the retailers. The latter is the effect this year, and indeed is the one most commonly consequent upon low prices. If it were not so, it would mean that buyers had to do the holding and prices would drop farther on that account. It is usually, however, a better course to sell June and July butter at such prices as can be got now than to hold for higher ones. The fallacy upon which every dealer counts is, that the market is dull now because the offers are excessive, and that the carrying off of this excess will be followed by better prices when there will be less butter to sell. The prices obtained on a late autumn or a winter market are always far below those to be had at this time of year, so that it is best to sell butter when it is fresh and new.

The present dulness is not owing to any appreciable over-supply of butter. There is no lack of butter ; all can be had that is wanted for local consumption at the easy prices that prevail. But the supply would be much greater if there were no reserve on the part of country holders. They will not take the prices that the export market offers, and they consequently hold on to the stock. Canadian butter is not making the pressure upon the market that keeps prices for export at their present low level. The quantity of it upon the market is not great enough for that, while the quality is not below the average of former years. As a matter of fact, the quality is better, the moderately dry weather of spring and early summer having produced a less luxuriant herbage than the cows fed upon a year ago. The rank growth of the grass crop of '90 was one cause of a good deal of the butter of that year going off flavor. The easy prices of dairy butter makes business dull in creamery stock. There has been remarkably little creamery butter handled here this year.

The cause of the dulness must be looked for outside. Exporters can get the very best creamery for their customers abroad, laid down here from the United States at 17c. That price is not inclusive of duty, because there is no duty on butter brought in for export. The butter is shipped and may be kept stored in bond, and as it costs only about ⅜c. per lb. to store it from now till January, it can be kept if need be for a better market and yet undersell Canadian creamery. Fancy Elgin is said to be the equal to our best, and it is offered from Chicago at 17c., while other fancy goods are quoted at 16½c., with 16c. for storage grades and occasional lots at 15½c. This is enough to make our creamery as well as our dairy butter dull. Fancy ladles are offered from the same source in car lots, half No. 1 and half No. 2, at 12¼ to 12½c. for the No. 1 and at a cent lower for the No. 2. Our dairy butter cannot sell for 14c. on foreign account while these prices hold. Canadian shippers are buying and storing at Montreal from United States houses, that course enabling them to supply butter to the English market, while to depend on the Canadian supply would make business impossible.

The manufacturers of French matches are now agreed upon prices. Their list is now out, quoting French matches at $3.50 in small lots.

DECEIT IN SELLING GOODS.

Misrepresentation in the sale of goods as well as in the affairs of life do not add to the profit of those who use this means to secure trade. The truth can as well be spoken, and it will aid in the establishing of reputation to those who practice the same. One reason why many of the most successful of our retail grocery firms have obtained and held the trade they serve, is because of the truthfulness of statements made concerning goods sold by them. They have secured the confidence of their patrons, and this is the keynote of success. We allude to this matter because we had occasion to call upon a grocer lately, who during our visit had quite a wrangle with a lady who had purchased two pounds of best butter, quoted on a placard at the price of twenty-three cents a pound. When she paid for same the grocer charged at the rate of twenty-five cents a pound. To this she objected, and rightly to. The grocer claimed that while he offered his best butter at twenty-three cents he did not mean his Elgin creamery butter. This was certainly a most foolish argument. The lady contended that there was gross deception on the part of the grocer and that "best" did not mean second quality. She did not take the butter, and left the store in a frame of mind that may prove an injury to the grocer.

Is there any doubt about such business methods being detrimental? A grocer who pursues such a course injures not alone his own reputation, but gives opportunity for many unpleasant and unjust criticisms by those who delight to slur and ridicule efforts made to elevate the trade. There is no surer way to drive away trade than to make misrepresentation. It is bound to leak out. The grocer who thinks he can fool his patrons will find out when too late that he has been fooling himself. Better follow the golden rule, treat your patrons as you want to be treated, and you will secure their confidence, respect and support.—Retail Grocers' Advocate.

TOO IMPORTANT.

A certain dry goods clerk was in the habit of saying to his associates that the concern would find it pretty hard to get along without him. These remarks came to the ears of the senior partner, and he called the clerk into the inner office.

"Mr. Jenkins," he began, "you have been very efficient, and we highly appreciate your services, but we have heard it said that if you were to die, the business could not possibly survive the loss. This has worried us a good deal, for you, like all the rest of us, are liable to drop off suddenly.

"We have concluded, therefore, for our peace of mind, to experiment while we are both in good health, and see if the concern can bear up under your loss. You will accordingly consider yourself dead for one year, and we will try to get on without you for that length of time."

THE CHINA TEA TRADE.

Mr. Consul Gardener of Hankow in a report just issued, has a good deal to say about the tea trade, a synopsis of which we reproduce from the London Grocer as follows: The advantages Indian and Ceylon tea growers have over those in China may be recited as follows: First, greater command of capital; second, facility of obtaining loans at a lower rate of interest; third, freedom from likin, octroi, and export duty; fourth, command of a better and cheaper labor market; fifth command of chemical and agricultural knowledge; sixth, better acquaintance with tastes and requirements of purchasers; seventh, easier modes of transport; eight, great nearness to countries that purchase; ninth, enormous public works facilitating irrigation in dry seasons and preventing floods in wet seasons; tenth, large size of tea estates; eleven, better machinery.

First—Greater command of capital. In India and Ceylon tea estates are generally owned by companies, consisting of many share-holders, whose livelihood is not dependent on the out-turn of the estate for a year or two. The companies can consequently afford to carry on business at a loss for several years; can purchase expensive land, machinery and plant: and can spend large sums of money on experiments, on agents, and on investigating the tastes and requirements of purchasers.

Second—Facility of obtaining loans at a lower rate of interest. The Indian tea grower can borrow money at from 4 per cent. to 5 per cent. a year, while the Chinese tea grower has to pay from 20 per cent to 30 per cent.

Third—In India and Ceylon the land tax is lighter than in China, and there is absolutely no likin, octroi or export duty to pay. In China the likin and export duty often amount to 30 per cent. of the selling price of tea abroad, and to 100 per cent. of the prime cost of its production in China.

Fourth—Command of a better and cheaper labor market. The Indian and Ceylon agriculturist do not, indeed, possess the physical strength, endurance or intelligence of the Chinaman; but, in the climates best suited for tea, he is able to subsist on less than the Chinaman can, and by growing and picking tea, and doing nothing else, he attains great manual dexterity in this occupation, which more than compensates for his lack of physical strength and of general intelligence, both of which qualities can in this branch of labor be dispensed with.

Fifth—The command of chemical and agricultural knowledge. None but an expert in both chemical science and agricultural chemistry can explain how important this point is. I will only give one illustration. One of the chemical ingredients of tea is "tannin," which gives tea its bitter and astringent flavor. In every country the water differs. In some parts of England the water is of such a nature that it does not easily assimilate with the tannin; hence for those regions a tea with much tannin in it is desirable. The water on the plains of Russia, on the other hand, easily assimilates with tannin; hence in those regions, tea to be saleable must contain only a little tannin, or else it will be too bitter and too astringent. The tea planters in India and Ceylon have the necessary knowledge of chemistry and chemical agriculture at their command to produce in the tea, by cultivation and manufacture, the requisite amount of tannin.

Sixth—Better acquaintance with the tastes and requirements of purchasers. Thus, in Great Britain, where tea is drunk with milk, strength is the requisite; in Russia, where tea is taken without milk, flavor. Hitherto the Indian and Ceylon growers have devoted their principal attention to strength, but the Ceylon grower has lately been successful in producing flavor. Hitherto the Indian and Ceylon growers have been contented in supplying the British markets, but efforts are now being made to supply the Russian also. The Indian and Ceylon growers have a further advantage over the Chinese in being intimate with the retail dealers and their mode of conducting business.

Seventh—Easier modes of transport. Many of the Indian and Ceylon tea estates have railways running right to their packing-houses from wharves, along side which the steamers lie. Hence the chests are carried cheaply to their destination, and the contents are not injured by being constantly moved and banged about by careless porters.

Eighth—Ceylon is not half the distance from England and Russia that China is, and India is only 60 per cent. of the distance. Hence there is a saving in freight and a quicker sale, and consequent speedier return of the money invested.

Ninth—The enormous public works in India facilitating irrigation in dry seasons and preventing floods in wet seasons. Hence the Indian tea grower has far less to fear from floods and droughts than the Chinese.

Tenth—The size of the tea estates. The enormous size of the tea estates in India and Ceylon, as compared with those in China, gives the growers in the former countries the following advantages over the growers in the last country: (a) The pickers, etc., being constantly employed on exactly the same work, attain in that work a skill and celerity unattainable by men who only occasionally do the work. (b) The tea for a whole chop, being picked in a shorter time, is of more uniform quality. (c) The firing establishment is on the plantation. The leaf can, therefore, be at once stored, and there is no danger of its being injured by weather on the way from the tea garden to the store-house. (d) There is a saving of carriage and packing from the tea garden to the firing establishment. (e) The various processes of preparation can be carried on without intermission. There is consequently no waste of labor or fuel.

Eleventh—Better machinery in India gives a treble advantage to the Indian grower. It lessens the cost of preparation. It turns out a better quality of tea, and it insures uniformity between the sample and the bulk.

Against all these advantages of the Indian and Ceylon grower China possesses one advantage, and that is that the Chinese tea grower, working for his own hand instead of wages, brings often greater care and more industry to the task. Experience takes the place of science, and he is able to produce a finer flavored tea than has yet been produced in India. A noteworthy feature in the tea trade of 1890 has been that some of the Russian and British merchants here have sent skilled agents to the tea firers in the interior to teach them how to select leaves and fire the tea, so as specially to suit the Moscow market. The chops thus produced have sold so well in Russia that doubtless this year this operation will be extended. In America and Canada green tea from Japan is drank; our teas do not go to those countries. As for Australasia, where some of our teas go, the competition of India and Ceylon is telling there, though in a degree less than in Great Britain.

Mr. Gardner also states that tea dust brick tea is made at Hankow from common tea dust, and adheres by pressure after being steamed in a cotton cloth bag for a moment. The pressure is hand pressure, i.e., the quantity of tea dust required is placed in a bag, and, after being steamed, is poured into a wooden mould, and is pressed to the required consistency by blows from a heavy mallet wielded by one of the laborers. The cost of the common tea dust is between 1⅓d. and 1½d. per pound. The cost of manufacture, export duty, packing, etc., about doubles the price; so that the cost on board ship for export from here amounts to say 2¾d. per pound. About 300 pounds to 400 pounds of brick tea go to a basket made of light bamboo. Two baskets form a camel load. Brick tea is in bulk about one-sixth of ordinary tea. Formerly much of the brick tea reached Urga by going to the Han River, and thence through the Ning-usia gate in the great wall of China. In 1890 all the brick tea exported from Hankow through the imperial maritime customs went by steamer to Tientsin, whence it found its way—the tea dust brick tea to Russian Siberia, and the other brick tea to Mongolia.

The St. Thomas council has passed a grocers' early closing by-law, which requires that all grocers shall, after Aug. 10 next, close every night at 7 o'clock, except on Saturdays and nights before holidays. A petition was signed by three-fourths of the grocers in the city, or by 36 out of 46. The penalty for violating the by-law is not less than $1 or more than $50, with imprisonment in default of payment.

SOMETHING FOR NOTHING.

A leading receiver of country produce who had lost the patronage of a leading steamship company which he had held for several years replied when asked in relation thereto: "Some one else wanted to furnish something for nothing. I get nothing for doing nothing, and, therefore, am just as well off. Ain't I?'

Our answer was yes. What is yours? If we judge by the record and results we find that there are thousands, yea, tens of thousands answering differently; they are engaged in furnishing something for nothing. They work supplying household goods fourteen to eighteen hours per day, year in and year out, adding nothing to their capital and many trading the something with which they started business for nothing The cutter is a giver of something for nothing. The dealer who sells granulated sugar at 4 to 4½ cents per pound is working for less than nothing, because he throws in paper, string, loss in weight, time and a portion of his general store expenses just for the fun of the thing.

Another class distribute popular proprietary articles for nothing; others provisions or staple canned goods. Fortunately, we now and then meet a prosperous retailer who talks in this way: "I get 10 per cent. advance on sugar, and average a fair profit all around; we keep such an extensive line of goods that this is much easier to do than formerly." The one in mind has a very extensive business in two large cities and is a type of the successful grocer in all cities.

The men who have made their mark in the retail trade are not those who have aimed at selling goods at very low prices; rather, those whose constant study has been high quality, variety and a complete service. With such a policy one can win against all competitors, irrespective of location or class of customers served.

In one of our large city markets is a man who has made a fortune selling butter and cheese. His stand is crowded from morn till night, in marked contrast to other nearby stands where customers are only seen occasionally. His inflexible rule has been to keep only the finest grade of butter cheese and eggs. The result has been a reputation for quality that is in itself worth a competency.

Another of our most successful retailers, who started fifty-one years ago with $900, and to-day is a millionaire, said, when asked for the secret of his success: "Only one thing, Always reliable. Everything we sell must be of that character; there must be no deviation.

People are willing to pay for satisfactory service. It is akin to paying your tailor, or shoemaker for style and fit, or your doctor for his skill and experience.

Even the heathen prefer to pay for the gospel than have it free. Father Gavazzi, the Italian missionery, said the free distribution of Bibles was a mistake, because the poor argued that what was not worth paying for was not worth having, and so they lit their pipes with the tracts and Testaments that cost nothing, treasuring them, however, when they were obtained at some cost, no matter how slight.

People are always suspicious of the merchant who offers something for nothing, or next door to nothing. And they are right. Customers know that it costs something to open a store, heat, light, superintendent and carry it on, and that they are expected to pay therefor, in addition to a fair price for the merchant's time, knowledge and service. The moment the seller announces goods at cost he challenges suspicion. Why then pursue the wretched policy of "giving something for nothing, when you can get nothing for doing nothing.—American Grocer.

THE CONTRACT SYSTEM.

We hardly understand why a number of trade journalists are frothing at the mouth in their highly wrought indignation regarding "contract system." We will admit, at the start, the contract system may have its faults, but did it ever occur to these editors that a manufacturer has the right of having his own property rights recognized.

Say two men start in the manufacturing of plug tobacco. By care, attention, good judgment, push and advertising, they begin to thrive. Soon their tobacco begins to be actively called for. Why? Because the wholesaler has pushed its sale? No! But because of the two men's care, attention, good judgment, push and advertising.

Soon these two men find that people are trying to make capital or improve their own business by pushing the two men's plug—selling at cost—below cost—and then making their profit up on other goods. Have not these two men the right to protect what is their own, and to say to these wholesalers, who, by selling at or below cost, would deter scores of others from selling the tobacco. "Now, to protect ourselves, and in justice to the majority, we ask you to agree to sell our own property at the price we shall establish, or we cannot sell you what we have made entirely through our own care, attention, good judgment, push and advertising?"

Take away this contract system, which compels the cutter to make a profit, and protects the careful, legitimate wholesaler, and in less than five years the largest plug tobacco manufacturers in the United States will lose 50 per cent. of the business they built up entirely through their own care, attention, good judgment, push and advertising.

We have followed this matter for many years, and we know the manufacturer is justified, by facts and figures, to protect himself against the jobber selling at cost.—Grocery Trade Price List.

TOO SMART.

The red flag fluttered over the door of Gillam's Emporium. The villagers were crowding the sidewalk, while from within came the sound of the auctioneer's nasal tones and the rap of his hammer. Mr. Whiffin, a merchant from the neighboring county town, stopped in a group of men outside.

"Ned Gillam sold out by the sheriff! What does that mean? I should have said that of all the young men in this village he was the one who would make his way. Has he taken to drink?"

"Not at all," said the squire. "He's sober enough."

"Ned understood his business," pursued Whiffin, still curious. "He was a salesman for me for two years, you know. I never had a more polite fellow to customers, nor one who could run off goods faster. I never had any damaged goods left on his counter. He sold them at full price. He was almost too smart."

"You have hit the nail on the head, there!" said the squire. "Gillam is a pleasant, polite fellow, but tricky. When he opened the Emporium we all went there to buy. I took my custom from old David Longaker at the corner, thinking that we must have the 'fine table delicacies' which Ned promised.

"But presently I discovered that whenever he could palm off inferior goods for the best he did so. I never went back to him. David's goods were just what he represented them to be. He's a crusty old fellow, but his word is to be taken."

"Our experience was the same," said the doctor. "My wife and daughters wanted to keep up with the fashion, and bought their hats and gowns which Ned declared were the style in New York.

"But when they found they were old auction goods which he had bought cheap and sold at high profit, they never went into his store again.

"That is the history of his dealings with most of the villagers. One after another dropped away until he had nobody left. Hence—the red flag and the sheriff!" waving his hand.

"Well! well! I always thought Ned Gillam would score a success in this world!" said Mr. Whiffin, as he climbed into his buggy and drove toward home. "Such a polite fellow and so agreeable to everybody!" he muttered, flicking his horse gently.

Young Gillam himself, as he watched the auctioneer and the buyers, wondered bitterly at his defeat. He had started with but little capital, but clear of debt. Now he owed every one, and the assets would not cover his debts.

"I tried to be civil and pleasant," he said. "I looked sharply after my own interest. I don't know where my mistake was!"

But every villager in the crowd knew.

The secret was a truth as old as the first trade which was made between the children of Adam; it repeats itself in every individual life to-day; and most readers who have seen this glimpse of village history can tell what it is.—Youth's Companion.

THE TORTOISE AND THE HARE.

'Tis an old story which has been often and often repeated, that it is not the first in the start of the race which wins, but the one who gets by the winning post before any of the others. Every one of our readers, no doubt, remembers the nursery legend of the Hare and the Tortoise. It may appear somewhat foolish on the face of it, but, nevertheless, it is having pertinent illustration in every day life. The hare is no doubt the fleetest and would, under ordinary circumstances, outstrip the tortoise, but the tortoise has got an indefatigable power for hard work when it starts out to accomplish a certain object, but there is just a possibility of it beating the hare. So far as everyday business is concerned we can recall to our mind many illustrations of the fact that the tortoise in business has many times outstripped the hare.

It is not where you start in life by which you are judged, but where you end. Shakespeare says, "All's well that ends well," and there is no better illustration to be found of this maxim than in the business and commercial world. We have in our mind two young men who about twelve years ago were in positions very wide apart, so far as remuneration and responsibility is concerned. One of them was earning in the neighborhood of $1,000 a year, and the other was earning somewhere in the neighborhood of $250, or about one-fourth. There was very little difference in their ages, and the young man who was earning $1,000 a year looked down upon the $250 cuss with a certain amount of contempt. Time passed on and about three years ago these same two individuals happened to meet in our presence. The gentleman with $1,000 a year income was still earning $1,000 a year and no more, but the disparaged individual, who formerly was struggling hard for his $250, was earning $6,000 a year. "All's well that ends well," and in this case as in many others, it was not the one who had the most advantages and opportunities who succeeded the best. If anyone had been told that the individual who was then earning $250 a year, had the audacity to even aspire to $6,000 a year, let alone to actually accomplish it, or to absolutely earn it, they would have been considered fit subjects for a lunatic asylum. While this case may appear to a very large extent a romantic one, such things are accomplished, or are in process of being accomplished every day in the year.

As an illustration of how easily money can be lost or rather wasted, we may mention that quite recently a very apt illustration came under our own personal notice. A young man of more than ordinary intelligence entered a business. It was new to him. He had very little experience in it and less cautiousless than he had knowledge of the trade in which he was engaged. He took a place the rent of which would frighten an ordinary business man, fitted it up elaborately and expected great things, but was lamentably surprised when he found that customers did not walk in and buy his wares with a rush. The expenses were still continuing but the customers failed to realize. The result was that in less than six months he had sunk a round six thousand dollars in the business without the remotest possibility of ever getting it back again. His only assets were his fixtures and these put up by the hammer would not realize sufficient to pay the auctioneer. He attempted to be a hare in the race for business but he was many degrees below the slowest tortoise ever born. Young men commencing business should always remember the story of the hare and the tortoise. It would be serviceable to them as well as profitable. "All's well that ends well." Never mind the beginning but take good care of the finish; then you are all right.—National Grocer.

LIFE BEHIND THE COUNTER.

Life behind the counter is a deceptive one. Thousands are attracted to it on account of its apparent ease. The farmer comes to town these hot days with a load of wood or a load of hay and after tramping about for an hour or two he disposes of it. After paying the horseshoer for the setting of a new shoe to replace the one lost off coming in, and a new neckyoke to replace the one he broke trying to back his load into an alley, he starts for home. As he jolts along over the cobble stones astride of his boom pole, covered with dust, and the muddy sweat dropping from the end of his nose, he occasionally passes a store. He peeps in under the heavy awning and catches a glimpse of the smiling face of the trader as he stands in the open doorway, in his nice clean white shirt sleeves with a pencil over his right ear and surrounded with a most temptingly display of goods. It looks so cool, cosy and pleasant that it reminds the farmer of an oasis in a desert, and he soliliquizes, "Now that Jones had only $600 when he went into business. He worked Tom Brown's farm on shares and didn't know any more about the business than I do. My little farm is worth $3,000, and yet I am compelled to keep my nose on the grindstone from morning till night and work like a confounded slave and be baked in the sun, smothered with dirt and dust, and be dubbed a dolt and a fool by every young upstart in town. I am subjected to all this simply for the sake of keeping soul and body together, while Jones, with a capital of only $600, can live like a gentleman, wear fine clothes, smoke cigars, go to the theatre, live on top shelf and make money beside." And so the farmer goes home with a flea in his ear and resolves to sell his little farm and embark in the mercantile business and join the great army of men who live behind the counter. In my travels I come across many a man who had thus been lured away from safe moorings and had become stranded on the rock of merchandising. We say life behind the counter is a deceptive one. The seeming ease that appears on the surface is a fraud and a delusion. No man who chooses a life behind a counter, for the sake of comfort and ease, and finds it, will ever succeed. It is a great mistake (and a very common one, too) to suppose that a man can dress up and sit down in an easy chair behind the counter and smoke and read and make money. Thousands have made this mistake to their sorrow, and thousands more are making it to-day, but will not make the discovery until it is too late.

When men learn the fact that a life behind the counter requires a careful preparation and that certain qualifications are absolutely necessary to insure success, then will fewer mistakes be made. No farmer is stupid enough to suppose for an instant that he could succeed at the bench, build a house or make a watch without some previous training, yet large numbers of them are just foolish enough to suppose that no special qualifications are necessary to conduct a successful mercantile business. Did you ever go behind the counter and look under? I shall never forget the first time I went behind the counter. I was a little fellow and lived on a farm. One day I was in the village store and the merchant, who was busy at the rear end of the store, sent me behind the counter for a box of old nails and the hatchet. I had always held a very exalted opinion of the counter. It was so nicely painted and finished and I had seen so much money pass over it and drop with a "chink" into some mysterious receptacle, and then the man who stood behind the counter was a very important personage in my childish estimation, and my highest ambition was to become a great man just like he was when I got to be a man. But when I looked under that counter and saw its skeleton, I was frightened. I saw its rough frame work braced in every direction with dusty old cob-webs. I saw the ruined remains of what had once been quite a collection of useful articles, and I was afraid to explore for the nail box for fear that I might discover the remains of some human being.

Since that early event in my life I have passed through many experiences, some of which have been bitter ones, and have learned a great many things. To-day, when I look under the counter, I see in my imagination the dust-covered bones of thousands of farmers, and mechanics, and young men with money but nothing else, who made the fatal mistake already referred to, and were sacrificed on the altar of ignorance and incompetency.—E. A. Owen in Michigan Trader.

ALL KINDS OF DEBTORS AND HOW TO MEET THEM.

There is a class of debtors in every community regarded as hopeless. Some of them, strange to say, are in business and getting credit, and yet have been regarded as hopeless for years. They manage to continue in business by preying upon the inexperienced or careless seller, whose object is rather to make a sale than to make a collection. There is a form of advertising now resorted to by many new concerns which consists in putting out goods everywhere, no matter what the credit, for the purpose of introducing them, and with the ultimate object of dropping unworthy customers when the goods have found a market. This and many other similar reasons may be given for the long life of many business houses that are utterly insolvent and unworthy of credit, and that live only to beat their creditors and to boast of it. Claims received by lawyers against these houses, extending through a series of years, tell the story of the fraud of which such houses are guilty, and of the fearful ignorance or carelessness of some salesmen or credit men. There is one house in Detroit, to-day, doing an apparently thriving business on a leading thoroughfare, which seems to meet with no difficulty whatever in getting goods, and yet inquiry of almost any lawyer in the city will show uncollectable bills all the way from a day to six years overdue.

The faithful efforts of the mercantile agencies, instead of killing this business, seemingly have no effect upon it, for what can the agency do when men will fly in the face of unfavorable reports and sell their goods notwithstanding. The most independent man on earth is frequently the hopeless debtor. His very hopelessness is his strength. Lawyers do not threaten, because they know it means ridiculous failure. Collectors do not bore them because they know them to be proof against duns. The sheriff does not bother them, because previous efforts have proven the unsatisfactory outcome of levies.

Thus, so long as he can get goods—and there appears no limit to his ability to do so—he is all right. Men will sell this sort of a tradesman, and then blame the collector for what appears to be lukewarm effort to collect. The failure to realize is charged to the lawyer's or the agency's incompetency, instead of placing the burden of blame where it belongs, that is, on the credit man.

The way to meet this man is never to sell him—and if he once becomes your debtor do not hesitate to recognize your mistake and blame the proper person for it. You can close this man up, but at your own expense and with little profit to yourself, and for this reason you will let him run to suck the blood of other victims. A sharp, watchful attorney may some day see a chance to slip in and get a stray dollar, and that is your only hope. The best way to meet this class of debtors is to keep away from it.—The Collector.

MANUFACTURERS AND GROCERS.

The retailer is the only medium of distribution who comes in direct contact with the vast army of consumers. It is for this reason that the retail grocer is the most important factor in the distribution of food products. His power in the premises is tremendous, and it should not be overlooked. Advertising creates a demand, but the demand so created is not always satisfied; in other words, the manufacturer may expend many thousands of dollars a year in advertising, and yet many of those he hopes to reach in this way are not influenced to buy his goods. They may be influenced, but the force of the advertising is often neutralized by the grocer. The grocer may be induced to do this for many reasons; through a desire to handle other goods, or, through prejudice, pique and ignorance. But no matter what the occasion is, the fact remains that any retail grocer who has a good trade, and has the confidence of that trade, can make or break a brand of goods, as far as his particular trade is concerned. Of course, such action on the part of the grocer often carries its own penalty, for if a customer wants a certain article, and will not take any other brand; if his wants are not supplied by the grocer with whom he regularly deals, then he will go elsewhere for it. This would go to prove that once a legitimate demand is created for an article, the grocer must obtain a supply or lose his trade. This is the natural sequence. But again, as it very often happens, the grocer will say: "I do not keep these goods, but I have something better." To a stranger or a transient or occasional customer, such an argument on the part of the grocer would carry little weight, but should that customer have confidence in the grocer, whether the customer is a regular one or not, it can readily be seen how easily the grocer can supplant one brand for another, or induce the customer to drop all enquiry for an article for which the demand was created by advertising. We know of many instances where certain brands of goods were kept out of stock by grocers, who made up their minds that they would not keep them. We have also known of instances where the grocer was compelled to keep goods in stock because he could not help himself, for the simple reason that good customers insisted upon having them, and would take nothing else. But it is a bad plan, these forced purchases, and they do not always result satisfactorily to the manufacturer. It is much the better plan to establish a friendly, if not cordial relation with the grocer on the part of the manufacturer, and then it is comparatively smooth sailing all the way through. The grocer will then take much more interest in the goods, and will keep them out to the front, and push them, not only for the profit, but for the sake of that friendly feeling. Again, we would say, the manufacturer should help the grocer if he would have the grocer help him. It is a fair division of labor, and it will result in a fair division of profits all around. The manufacturer who ignores the value of the retail grocers' assistance in helping him introduce his goods does not know his business.—Grocers' Monthly Review.

HONESTY IN THE GROCERY TRADE.

There are tricks in every trade, is an old saying. To-day we hear a great deal of trade morality, pure food, etc., but little about the tricks of the retailer. One would suppose that there were none. We hear the cry that the wholesaler is retailing and that it isn't right. But what do we hear about the retailer? Nothing, absolutely nothing. He hasn't any tricks. He don't give false measure or short weight. and in all his dealings he is a model to be followed.

Such talk as the above is simply bosh. There is hardly a wholesaler in business but could give column after column of impositions and frauds that the retailer has practiced upon him.

"The last barrel of eggs I received from you is three dozen short and there were two dozen bad." The grocer, however, was cutting on the price of eggs and so underselling his neighbor grocer. Now, does any sane man believe such a statement as the above, and especially so when every barrel of eggs purchased would be sure (?) to run short or contain a number of bad ones. This is not fiction, but solid substantial truth we are giving.

We have known cases of retailers writing: "Box received and three bottles broken." Not a bottle was broken, but a rebate on those that they claim was broken increased their profit just so much.

Now these are only a few of the illustrations that could be given to show that there are unscrupulous retailers in the grocery trade as in every other business.

Would not some of our exchanges be doing a good work if occasionally they got hold of the retailer and gave him a roasting, to speak? There is a great deal to reform in the grocery trade right among the retailers themselves. Honesty in dealing with customers in their weight, measure and quality should be every merchant's first thought, and associations should not hesitate to condemn in words that contain no double meaning, that while we ask no more than justice from the wholesaler, at the same time our object and aim is to require the same upon the part of the retailer in his dealings with the wholesaler.

We hope associations all through the state will now begin to correct abuses among themselves, and there are many of them that need handling with gloves off. We must begin at the foundation if we would rear a noble and permanent structure.

How soon could the retailer drive from the market impure and unwholesome goods if he saw fit to do so. He stands between the manufacturer and consumer, and a few words of warning from him to the consumer, regarding such goods would have a most beneficial effect. But how many do this? The margin on adulteration is larger than on pure goods. These are questions that can be handled with good effect by all our associations.—Merchants' Mail.

Notwithstanding the continuous descent of rain on the 29th ult., the procession of grocery wagons from the Market Square to Queen's Park in London in connection with the picnic was large and proved a pleasing sight. Some 40 rigs formed in line, decorated in various ways, and keen competition for the prizes was the result. Owing to the unfavorable weather the band of the Seventh Fusiliers, who had been engaged for the occasion, did not march as was expected. However, the procession was a creditable display, the decorations on some of the wagons giving evidence of excellent taste. Grocers from all parts of the city were represented in the line of march.

M. Manoury, a chemist in Cuba, recently discovered a means of utilising molasses in the glucose from it and rendering it fit for crystallisation. The discovery was received by sugar planters in the island with much enthusiasm, and some leading West Indian planters have visited Cuba. By the process the molasses are so modified that they are fit to be sent on with the cane juice, with which it is mingled, to the vacuum pan. The Sugar Trust in New York has refused to receive any of the new process sugar from the Constancia Usine, where the process is in operation, and the rejection of two shipments that had been sent forward. The complaint of the Trust is based upon an analysis made for the Trust by its chemists. The Spanish people accuse the Trust of having given a false reading of the polariscope, with the express purpose of injuring the sugar trade of Cuba.—Home and Colonial Mail.

C. M. Bostwick & Co., of St. John, N.B., are in trouble with the customs authorities. Some time ago they entered a lot of molasses for warehouse, but instead of placing it as the papers called for the firm took some of the packages to their own premises. The customs officers seized the goods. The matter was referred to Ottawa, and the firm was allowed to take the seized goods on the payment of the duty and a fine of $25. The other day the firm had a similar case which resulted in the seizure of two packages of molasses. They had obtained an order from Mr. Matthews on Monday for the removal of the molasses, but the collector decided that Matthews had no power to give it. The collector has reported the case to Ottawa. Mr. Bostwick is of the opinion that the Government should devise some other mode of dealing with molasses than the present system. If the firm was allowed to pay the duty when the molasses was entered for warehouse all this trouble would be avoided.

Competition is keen and active, and the only way to meet it successfully is to buy from the best houses, and at lowest prices.

PRICES UP OR DOWN.

Shall a merchant advance or reduce prices on goods in stock as their market value may change? This is an interesting question, particularly for the merchants in the smaller towns, where they have one or more competitors. Jobbers advance or reduce prices on goods as the market changes. Jobbers and manufacturers as a class are successful in business, so the rule would appear to be a good one for retailers to follow. But to return to our question: If, for instance, I bought a line of goods at prices that were unusually low, and by the time they were delivered the price had advanced 25 per cent., would it not be better to make the selling price conform to present cost, or to make a leader of the goods and rush them off, ignoring the rise in the market?

If the goods were rushed off in a hurry it would no doubt attract temporary custom, but when the supply was exhausted the same goods could not be placed except at an advance. As long as the goods lasted the low prices would no doubt worry my competitor, but my object is to build up my business, not to break down his. If, on the other hand, the goods in question had declined after mine had been bought, and my competitor had bought at the lower price, I should have had to lower my price to meet his. The fact that a merchant often has to follow the downward tendency of the market is an argument in favor of his taking advantage of an upward tendency and realizing large profits. If he is obliged to drop his price to meet competition let it be done quickly and to all customers alike. Do not fear your competitors, but if there is money to be lost lose it in a week rather than in ten weeks. Prompt action on your part will show that you intend to meet any price that is necessary to hold your trade, and it may be that one lesson of this kind will be all that will be required. I should advise a close and continuous scrutiny of the tendency of the market and a revision of prices of goods in stock to conform to such changes.—A. F. G. in Iron Age.

THE ART OF SELLING.

To the student of human nature probably no greater field to study odd and peculiar characters presents itself than in several departments of a large retail house. A few days spent at one of these houses will bring one in contact with more quaint and curious people than one would encounter in a long journey. The machinery of a salesman's life does not revolve as smoothly as one would suppose, judging by a superficial glance.

It is generally supposed that a salesman's duties consist merely in showing his goods and having them wrapped up. A more mistaken idea could not be imagined; for, if this were all, selling would be a pastime. The successful salesman must be a close observer to enable him to "size up" his customer at a glance and know how to approach him. He must be cool, cautious, determined, and possess an almost inexhaustible supply of patience.

In nearly all houses there is a rule that if a salesman fails to effect a sale he must transfer his customer to another salesman. The sales made by these transfers are numerous, proving conclusively one or two things—either the first salesman, through some reason or other, failed to make the proper impression, or the customer was such a peculiar character that the manner and language, combined with the different tactics of the second salesman, happened to catch his fancy. No one without the personal experience can realize the tremendous strain and tax to which a salesman's patience is subjected. He must be prepared to meet all sorts of statements and arguments and be able to disprove them promptly and in a genial manner. Under no circumstances must he lose his temper; if he does he is lost, no matter how much time and labor he has spent or menial worry he has suffered.—Am. Storekeeper.

MARKETS—Continued.

of medium and common qualities, for which there is not at present a very active demand. The Oonfa, with the first regular import of new Kaisows, arrived on Thursday, and the bulk of the samples have been placed on the market ; the quality, however, does not compare favarably with black leaf kinds, and comparatively few sales are reported. At the public sales of China teas rather more than 12,000 packages of Congou were offered without reserve, all of which sold at about previous low rates.

PETROLEUM.

There is some cutting going on in Canadian refined which is shaded from 16c. to 15c. for ten barrel lots. Other prices hold at former quotations. Business is very quiet.

The Petrolia Advertiser reports : Petrolia crude $1.34½ per bbl. Oil Springs crude $1.34½ per bbl. Oil has taken a jump in price since the vote on the Budget was taken, and is firm at the above quotations. Refined remains unchanged.

DRUGS AND CHEMICALS.

There is a very quiet time in the drug trade which has been deepened by the unseasonably cool weather. No features of importance have developed to change prices or otherwise affect the situation.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

Butter comes in quite up to the capacity of the demand, which is merely local. The supply has further resources and so has the demand, as there is an accumulation of stocks in the country on the one hand while on the other butter is wanted for export, but buyers and sellers are widely apart. The best price going, and it is due to local consumption that it is not lower, is 14 to 15c. Medium tub butter brings 11½ to 13c. The only scarce grades are those which would sell in the neighbourhood of 10c. and be suitable for baking purposes. The market is depressed by the offers of and operations in United States butter for export, which may be stored in bond here until a favorable market abroad opens up. The prices of this United States stock are away below those current here, and much farther below those held for by collectors in the country. Creamery butter is receiving little attention.

Cheese is firmer in sympathy with the export market, prices holding now at 9¼ to 9¾c.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

BEANS—A car was distributed last week along the street at $1.60. It is jobbing out at $1.70 to $1.80. They are very scarce.

DRIED APPLES—An order from Winnipeg has probably cleaned out this market. A hundred barrels were wanted, but only 48 could be got together, the price being 8c. Job lots are quoted nominally at 8½ to 9c.

EVAPORATED APPLES—The last interest manifested in the market was also on Winnipeg account, which involved the shipment of a moderate sized parcel at 13½c.

EGGS—The egg market has not yet quite levelled down or up. Some houses quote at 12½ to 13c., others at 13 simply, others again at 13 to 13½c., each being ruled by the circumstances peculiar to its own trade. Supplies are fairly good.

HAY—The supply appears to be increasing and prices accordingly do not favor seller any more than ever, $11 to $12 being the basis of present business. New baled hay is coming in.

HIDES—Are steady, last week's quotations holding, viz., 5c. for weights below calls, and 8½c. for others. Cured are featureless at 6c.

HONEY—Is dull at 7 to 10c. for clear, and 14 to 16c. for comb.

HOPS—Are in small compass and quiet at 35 to 37c. for 90's and 25c. for finest yearlings.

POTATOES—Are utterly demoralized, $1 to $1.25 per barrel being the unprecedented prices now going.

SKINS—Pelts are up to 40c., and lambskins to 50c.

STRAW—Is scarce at $6 to $8 for pressed oat.

WOOL—Is not in request, but is in fair supply at 18 to 19c. for fleeces.

FISH.

There is little life in the fish market. Consumption is still at an ebb. Stocks are light and prices at last week's basis, shown in Prices Current.

GREEN FRUIT.

Cool weather is yet a drawback to trade. It is adverse to prices, particularly of lemons, which have declined greatly in the New York market, where stocks are large. Prices are $4.50 for Palermos and $4.75 for Messinas. There are no Rodi oranges now in stock. Sarrentos are $4.50 and firm. Bananas are $1.25 to $1.50 and rather indiscriminately classed, "firsts" and "seconds" being meaningless terms this week.

SMALL FRUITS, ETC.

Red raspberries quote at 7½c., and are about done. Black ones are 8½c. Red currants are out of stock, the last selling at $1.25. Black currants are $1.75. California plums are $2.50. Early variety clingstone peaches of native growth are coming in at 60c. a basket. California peaches are $1.75. Delaware Mountain Rose peaches (freestones) are $1.50 in half-bushel baskets. Bartlett pears are $3.50 in cases and kegs. Tomatoes are $1 for United States stock, 90c. for native stock, which is scarce on account of cool weather. Apples are $2.25 to $2.75 per barrel. Cucumbers are 25c. a dozen. All the stock received now is Canadian.

PROVISIONS.

There has been more activity on a large scale, though round lots have been more a subject of inquiry than of actual transactions, the hindrance to them being scantiness of stock. All lines are firm and approaching scarceness is foreseen in most departments. Prices are expected to go up to be on a gravity with those of Chicago. An inquiry for a mixed car of backs and shoulders to make rolls was unable to get a quotation as the stock on the market was too limited.

BACON—Long clear is firm at 8¼ to 8½c. A car changed hands at 8c. for eastern shipment, and a half car at 8c. on Winnipeg account. Bellies are 10½ to 11c., backs 11 to 11½c., rolls 9c., all very firm.

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, August 6, 1891.

GROCERIES.

A review of the grocery market is still mainly a report of the sugar trade, with minor variations for each week. Other lines are of subordinate interest, as trade in them is dull, not only relatively to the sugar trade, but dull absolutely. Future canned goods have not got nearly into the position of activity they had reached a year ago as objects of trading interest. Teas are in only moderate request or inquiry. Dried fruit is fairly active. The dulness is not owing entirely to the overwhelming business in sugar. It is a seasonable feature. August is one of the dullest months in the grocery trade of the year, usually being exceeded in dulness only by February. The opening of the month was not marked by any notable slowness in meeting engagements, a considerable portion of which came due about the 3rd. Crop reports from all parts of the country are cheering. If present prospects are realized the autumn trade ought to be a good one.

CANNED GOODS.

Spot stock in canned goods is now too small to affect appreciably the situation of the new pack, even if remnants of the '90 pack should be carried over. The rate at which those remnants are becoming smaller almost precludes the possibility of any of them being left. Spot salmon is becoming very scarce and has advanced in price, Horse Shoe being now firm at $1.55. The new pack is yet in the embryotic state, and its outlines of the position it will hold in the market are not yet discernible. Everything is conjectural. New peas are in stock to sell at $1.12½ to $1.20. The new tomato crop ought to be a good one if it encounters no crosses in the shape of frost, as the recent weather has been the very best for growing plants. The price for corn and tomatoes of the new pack continues to quote from $1.05 to $1.10. New strawberries, samples of which were shown weeks ago, are also in stock quoting at $1.30 to $1.40. Raspberry and strawberry jams are offering at 25c. a dozen less than a year ago, the difference being due to the lower price of sugar. Canned mackerel are expected to be cheaper as the run and largeness of the fish are said to be unusual. The shortage in the French pack of sardines is almost certain to raise prices. Clover Leaf lobster is unchanged at the advance to $2.95.

The British Columbia Commercial Journal says: Advices from the Columbia river state that the pack there is now 100,000 cases short of what it was at the same period this time last year. The run in the Fraser still continues poor. A gentleman of considerable experience in the canning business, says that the big school of fish are liable to appear at at Beechy Bay just after the full moon which occurs early next week, and that they would reach the Fraser River in forty-eight hours after appearing there.

The Salmon run on the Skeena is the best that has been known for years, the fish being so thick that it is with difficulty they are handled. The canneries cannot keep up with the catch. The run on the Naas is also improving wonderfully and the canners are loooking forward to a splendid season.

Sloan & Crowther received on Monday their first shipment of the Simcoe cannery's new peas.

COFFEE.

The week has developed no new features in the coffee market. Business is dull, stocks are sufficient and prices are unchanged. Java continues to be very firm.

DRIED FRUIT.

A fair movement of stock from jobbers' hands is kept up. Currants are still the only line whose prices have any stamina in them. They are firm but unchanged at 6¼ to 6½c. for barrels, and 6⅜ to 6¾c. for half-barrels. Valencia raisins are weak, their range continuing between 4½ to 6c. Prunes are also weak at 4½c. and upwards.

NUTS.

The nut trade is not a fertile source of change at this time of year, and the past week's business has developed nothing new. Prices are steady, with stocks somewhat broken.

RICE AND SPICES.

A very good business goes on in rice. The receipt of the Japan rice noted a week ago has given an impulse to trade, as that class of rice had been several weeks out of stock. More is expected shortly. Spices offer no feature upon which to make special comment They sell steadily but prices have not varied.

SUGAR.

The demand for granulated appears to be almost insatiable. In the work of supplying it there are few opportunities to collect stock. Jobbers now and then do have a lull, but the hand to mouth supplies they have distributed to get a breathing spell come simultaneously to an end, and then another feverish spell begins. The demand is still roomy and an immense lot of granulated sugar is bespoken. That probably is the reason prices have not gone up. The amount of sugar contracted for at current prices will keep the refiners busy for a considerable time yet, so that business is essentially on the basis of a past market. Nothing but new contracts could be affected by an advance, and as most of the refineries refuse to take new contracts except at an open price to be agreed upon at time of delivery, and as the time of delivery is indefinite, the market is ruled by the conditions which prevailed when the influx of orders went in above a month ago. Granulated is unchanged at 5c. for quantities of not less than 15 barrels and 5⅛c. for smaller quantities. Grocers' A does not go out rapidly as a supplement to granulated. It is little different from a soft sugar. The price is 4⅞ to 5c. The refiners are not producing any N. B. yellows now, leaving to low grade raws the filling of the demand for very dark sugars. There are not now any yellows to be had below 4⅛c. Raws are in liberal supply and in very good demand. Trinidad raws from 3⅞ to 4c., the under price being shaded in some cases, has fair sale. Barbadoes raws are also in stock.

Messrs. Davidson & Hay, in order to get through with their deliveries as promptly as possible, have imported 1,000 barrels of granulated sugar. They paid the 8-10c. per lb. of duty to shorten the lingering suspense of their customers.

Redpath's 5 lb. cartoons of cut loaf sugar are quoting again for the first time since the duty was removed. The price is 30c.

Davidson & Hay have received a shipment of vacuum pan Demerara and Barbados raws. They are fine, bright, crystalline sugars, to sell at 4⅜ to 4½c.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

The week's business in syrups and molasses has been unimportant. The demand has very little life in it for either. Prices hold at quotations in our List.

TEAS.

The position of the tea market has not materially changed. Business is limited by both the supply and the demand, the demand being backward because the grades most in favor are not in stock, with the exception of a few Japans as low as 17c. The low grades are not here yet, but are on the way and are in strong inquiry. Low grade Young Hysons are in as strong request as ever.

The Produce Markets' Review of the 25th ult. says: Business generally remains quiet in Congous, but prices show no material change except in the case of common new teas, which are rather cheaper. Fine and finest grades, on the other hand, are firmly held, as there can be little doubt that the supply of these will be far from excessive, and it will probably be found that the best teas of the season have been imported in the Moyune and Telemon, although possibly a few counterparts may arrive in later vessels. The Glenorchy, just arrived, has brought scarcely any fine parcels, although the shipment will prove a useful one, if merchants are willing to sell at moderate prices. Tarry teas are rather difficult to realize, even at the low rates now current, although in some districts there appears to be no objection to their flavor when not too pronounced. Pure black leafs from 9d. to 10d. show very good value at the recent decline on opening rates, and a fair amount of business has been transacted in these kinds, chiefly for home consumption, the export inquiry so far having been mainly for the finer qualities. Samples ex Benledi were shown on Thursday; the ship has brought a few counterparts of some fine parcels which arrived in the Moyune and Telemon, but the bulk of the cargo consists

ABOUT NOURISHING FOODS.

"OUR NATIONAL FOODS," put up in packages only, are not ordinary foods. They are prepared by the conversion of the starch into dextrine. THEY CONTAIN OVER DOUBLE THE NOURISHMENT THAT IS IN FLESH MEAT. A 4 lb. PACKAGE OF IRELAND'S DESICCATED WHEAT AT 25c. CONTAINS 30 GRAINS MORE NOURISHMENT THAN 10 lbs. OF BEEFSTEAK COSTING ABOUT $1.50. THINK OF THAT. People are beginning to find it out, when they ask now for Ireland's Desiccated Wheat in packages they mean it. The grocer need not say "we have it in bulk just as good," for the customer is at once suspicious, for we do not sell it in bulk. Sold by all first-class grocers and manufactured only by

McLAREN'S

Is Honest Goods and just the Thing on Which to make or Extend a Business.

COOK'S FRIEND BAKING POWDER.

The Best Grocers Make a point of Keeping it always in Stock.

MARKETS—Continued.

HAMS—Are unaltered at 12c. for smoked and 10 to 11c. for pickled. A bid of 10c. for a car load of pickled was refused.

LARD—Canadian tubs are 10¼c., with pails 10¼c., and firm. Compound is 8 1-2 to 9c.

MESS PORK—Is very scarce at $15.50 for heavy and $16.50 to $17 for Canadian short cut. A carload changed hands at $16.50.

DRESSED HOGS—Inquiries for lots of two and three cars are heard now and then for mid September delivery, but $7.50 is the invariable quotation.

SALT.

The sales of salt for the past week have been larger than usual. The sales of Tuesday, alone, by the Toronto Salt Works include 4 cars of sacks at 70c., 3 cars of barrels at $1.20, 2 cars of dairy at $1.25, and a car of rock salt at $12 per ton.

DRY GOODS.

The trade is featureless and wanting in activity. Nothing has transpired to make any change in the situation.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Aug 6, 1891.

There is little change to note in the position of affairs this week except that aside from the briskness entailed by pushing forward supplies of sugar other lines generally are quiet, supplies in firsts hands having been reduced. On the whole the indications are generally encouraging.

SUGAR AND SYRUP.

The brisk demand for sugar continues but refiners are making more progress in clearing off old olders. Values remain about the same, but in the case of especially prompt delivery, buyers are willing to concede a fraction or so. Quite a lot of raw stock has left first hands during the week on Western account at a fraction over 4c. We quote granulated 4⅝ to 4¾c. and yellows 3⅞ to 4¼c.

Syrups have a small movement at prices ranging from 2¾ to 3c.

MOLASSES.

There is only a small quiet sort of business doing in molasses, Barbadoes selling in 50 puncheon lots at 40c.

TEAS.

Japan teas running from 16 to 19c. have a good enquiry, and a considerable business has been done on this basis during the week. Blacks are easier, while some small lots of Ceylon and India stock have changed hands during the week.

COFFEES AND SPICES.

There is no change in the coffee market which continues quiet, with stock small. Prices are firmly maintained at 20 to 21c. for Rio and Jamaica stock. Spices are dull with little doing. Pepper steady at 8 to 10c.

RICE.

The rice market remains about the same, but there are reports of some cutting. We quote prices the same, however : Patna, $4.50 to $5 ; choice, $4.25 to $4.50 ; standard, $3.90, and off-grades, $3.50 in car lots.

DRIED FRUIT.

There is no activity to note in dried fruit as buyers appear to have supplied themselves pretty well during the last fortnight, for some 50 tons of currants and raisins in the aggregate must have passed out of the hands of one importer alone. In fact stocks of both currants and raisins are reduced very much now, and it is doubtful if there is any quantity in first hands. Advices with regard to new crop, currants are favorable but reports regarding raisins are not so favorable as they were. There is some orders for new crop to note, but none have been booked at a price yet either on raisins or currants, for there are no quotations in this connection. We quote currants 5⅞ to 6⅛c., and raisins 4c.

GREEN FRUIT.

In staple lines business is quiet with prices steady. Messina and Sorrento oranges in boxes run from $3.50 to $4.50, and Jamaicas $7 to $8 in barrels, while lemons are steady at $4 to $5 per box.

CANNED GOODS.

There is little business doing in canned goods, but the market is shaping itself for more business. New peas are offering, in a jobbing way, $1.10 to $1.25, and tomatoes are being contracted for at 95 to 97½c. In fish business is fair, sales of salmon being made, while offerings are liberal enough.

FISH.

It is still a quiet and featureless market that we have to note, and business is so small as to be hardly worth mentioning.

SEASONABLE FRUIT.

There is quite a lot of fresh fruit of a seasonable character arriving now, and all the dealers are busy in consequence. Raspberries are still coming in freelw and selling at 60 to 80c. per pail, and 8 to9c. per box in crates. The cherry season is about over, what is arriving being of poor quality, selling at 90c. to $1 per basket. Receipts of early peaches are quite heavy and they run from 50 to 75c. per basket, occasional fancy lots bringing $1. The market is overstocked with Southern States stock, seven carloads arriving to-day and yesterday, and prices have dropped to $2 to $2.25 per bbl. New York State pears are in plentiful supply at $5 to $5.50, with a slow sale owing to the large receipts of California stock. California fruit run from $2.75 to $3.25, ditto peaches $1.75 to $2, and plums $1.75 to $2 per box. Moore's early grapes in 8-lb. baskets are selling at 75 to 80c., and bananas dull at 65c. to $1, with large receipts. Canada apples in baskets 25 to 40c. per basket ; early harvest ditto $2 to $2.25 per bbl.

HOPS.

There is little change in hops and no prospect of any on spot, the position being uninteresting in the absence of business. At the time of reports of serious crop damages in the States some of our local brewers got frightened and bought pretty freely on the basis of 30c. and over, laid down here, and they are not exactly pleased over it, as the market has taken a drop since then. In fact for what little stock there is here 20c. would quickly be accepted.

PROVISIONS.

The local provision market remains the same as noted a week ago, while prices generally are maintained. The quotations are : — Canadian short cut, per barrel, $17.00 to $17.25; mess pork, western, per barrel $15.25 to $15.75; short cut, western, per brl $17.00 to $17.25 ; hams, city cured, per pound 10 to 11c.; hams, canvassed, per lb 0 00 to 0 00c.; lard, Canadian, in pails, 8¾ to 9c.; bacon, per pound, 9 to 10c.; lard, com., refined, per lb, 7¾ to 8c.

EGGS.

Trade in eggs has been somewhat slower, but the demand has been sufficient to maintain values at 12½ to 13c.

BUTTER.

It is still a quiet butter market, and with buyers ideas as high as they are there is little change for anything in the way of export. Therefore the only business there is at present is largely a jobbing one. However, some holders have been relaxing the tension lately, and offerings of creameries at 19c. are noted for which 20c. was asked a week ago, but it will have to be 18½c. before business can be general. Western dairy is also held from 14½ to 16c. in the country, and such prices are not possible. Creamery 18. to 19c., townships dairy 16 to 18c., Morrisburg and Brockville 16 to 17c., western dairy 14 to 15c.

CHEESE.

The market was a quiet but steady one during the week with considerable activity in the country, which was not reflected on spot, as the cable enquiries are still unsatisfactory. We quote prices steady as follows: Finest colored 8⅞ to 9c., finest white 8⅝ to 00c., fine 8⅜ to 8½c., medium 8¼ to 8⅜, cable 44s.

GRAIN.

There is nothing except a quiet trade to note and no change of importance has occured. The stocks in store compared with those of a week ago show a decrease of 62,634 bushels of wheat, 3,091 bushels of corn, 12,207 bushels of peas, 14,258 bushels of oats, 3,915 bushels of barley. Compared with the corresponding date last year there is an increase of 221,337 bushels of wheat and a decrease of 40,720 bushels corn, 79,053 bushels of peas 14,537 bushels of oats, 10,014 bushels of barley. No. 1 hard Manitoba, $0 ; No. 2 do., $1.05 ; to $1.07; No. 3 do., 97c ; No. 2 Northern, 96 to 97 ; feed do., 70c; peas 90c. per 66 pounds in store; 91c. afloat; Manitoba oats; 50c. Upper Canada do., do., 51c.

TABLET TEA.

Tablet tea is manufactured at Hankow in factories belonging to Russian firms there. It is made of the finest tea dust procurable. The selection of the dust is the work of skilled experts; the cost of the dust varies from 10d. a pound upwards. This dust is manufactured into tablets by steam machinery. About two ounces and a half of dust are poured into a steel mould or a steel cylinder. The dust is poured in dry without steaming, and the pressure brought to bear is two tons per tablet. Great care is required in the manufacture and packing of tablet tea, and the cost is comparatively high. The tablets are wrapped first in tinfoil, then in expensive and attractive paper wrappers and finally packed in tin-lined cases for export to Russia. The tea, it is stated, loses none of its flavor by being pressed into tablets, and, as tablet tea is only one-sixth of the bulk of leaf tea, it is most convenient for travelers, and also for importing into the remoter regions of Russia. The increase in the export of tea dust from Hankow to 726,729 pounds in 1890, from 140,933 pounds in 1889, is due to the fact that while Indian and Ceylon teas are ousting China tea from the British market, many consumers, being accustomed to the flavor of China tea, wish for it. To meet this demand grocers use China tea dust to flavor the Indian tea. All the tea dust exported goes to Great Britain. Just lately a new commodity has come on the Hankow market, to which the customs give the name of log tea. It is an inferior tea with stalks packed in the shape of logs, which weigh from 8 to 80 pounds each log. The tea is wrapped in the leaves of the Bambusa latifolio, and then reduced in bulk by binding round the log with lengths of split bamboo. This log tea is sent to the Chinese ports for consumption, and is packed thus from motives of economy, both of packing and of freight.—London Grocer.

DISASTROUS RESULTS OF OUTSIDE SPECULATIONS.

The recent failure of several large mercantile firms in a prominent New England city, some of which had been in business for over half a century, and the notable instance of the financial embarrassment of the leading banking house in Great Britain, leads to the inquiry if mercantile and financial concerns, like individuals, especially in this speculative era, have not a limit set to their existence. Certainly the disasters we have noted seem to warrant this belief. All these firms under their founders and their immediate successors were highly prosperous, but the conservative method of doing business which characterized their management of affairs seems of late years to have been changed for a policy of rash and hazardous speculation which brought its usual results. In several recent conspicuous instances where large mercantile firms have failed it has been due wholly to operations outside of their legitimate business, to which cause, aside from that of insufficient capital, is to be attributed, no doubt, the greater proportion of such casualties. This is quite as true of the small trader who becomes bankrupt, as of the merchant whose operations involve the investment of millions. The man who has made a success of the dry goods business, for instance, conceives the idea that this sphere of activity is too narrow for his remarkable abilities and that he has only to direct his attention to mines, petroleum, or stocks in order to increase his gains a hundred fold. To hide a light of such enormous candle power under a dry goods counter, he thinks, is a waste of time and energy, and the thought that Jay Gould once sold mouse-traps, and that Rockafeller formerly dealt out oil by the gallon haunts his imagination day and night. The placidity and modest gains of the dry goods business lose their charms, and our friend goes in for the fascinations of speculation or embarks in a line of business which he does not understand and for which he has no natural aptitude. After a career, the duration of which is limited to the extent of the capital he has accumulated by years of saving and self-denial, he joins the army of shorn lambs and ends his career, perhaps, in an insane asylum; takes to drink or degenerates into a seedy insolvent, who shuffles around town among his former business associates, and bores them with musty anecdotes which they have no time nor inclination to hear. This is no fancy sketch, but its truth can, we are sure, be vouched for by all our mercantile readers of any experience. Its moral is obvious.—Grocer and Country Merchant.

MARKETS—Continued.

Straight grade, $5.00 to 5.10 ; Superior extras, $4.85 to 5.00 ; Good seconds, $4.55 to 4.65 ; Graham flour, $4.90 to 5.10 ; Oatmeal, $5.75; Oatmeal rolled,$6.15; Kiln dried cornmeal, $3 to 3.45 ; Rolled wheat, $5.50; Wheat bran per ton, $19 to 20 ; Shorts per ton $26 to 27 ; Middlings $27.50 to 28.50 ; Cracked corn, $35 ; Ground oil cake, $34 to $35 ; Moulee, $30 ; Split peas, $4.40 to $4.50 ; White beans per bushel, $1.80 to 2 ; Pot barley per barrel, $3.90 to 4.10 ; Canadian oats, choice quality, 60c. to 63c. ; Hay per ton, $11.75 to 13.

SUGAR.—There is no change in the position of the market for refined sugar, the demand being as urgent as ever. It is stated that in about a week or ten days' buyers will have little or no cause to complain that their orders are not promptly excuted.

Cut loaf, 5½c. ; Granulated, 4¾ to 5c.; Circle A, 4½c. ; White extra C, 4¼c. ; Standard, 3⅞c. to 4c. ; Extra yellow C, 3¾c. ; Yellow C, 3⅝c. to 3¾c.

MOLASSES.—The market, has, during the week under review, developed signs of weakness that were not looked for. Some business has been done, but the Upper Province markets have been overstocked by the importation of lower grades and American mixtures of molasses, so that the disposition of that article is restricted at present.

Barbados, 40c. ; Demerara, 35 to 38c. ; Diamond N. 48c.; Porto Rico, 37 to 38c.; Trinidad, 34 to 35c. ; Antigua, 34 to 35.

FISH.—There is nothing new to note in the local fish market. The outside demand continues to be so small as to be unappreciable.

Hard C. B. $5, ex vessel ; Western Shore, $4.50.

ST. JOHN, N.B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N.B., Aug. 3rd, 1891.

The condition of our market remains unchanged. Money is still scarce and that has a depressing effect upon business, though the opinion generally expressed is that trade will show considerable improvement during the next few weeks.

FLOUR—The quantity of flour handled lately compares very favorably with other years. There is a steady demand and very little change in price, though the tendency seems to be downward. We quote Manitoba patents $6 to $6.15, high grade patents $5.55 to $5.65, mediums $5.25 to $5.40.

MEAL—Considerable cornmeal has been brought here from the United States, which, after paying the duty, gives a better profit than can be made by handling domestic ground. The ruling price is $3.35 to $3.40.

OATMEAL — The price of oatmeal has fallen considerably since last quoted. It is being offered ex car for $5.35 for standard. Roller is selling for $5.60 to $5.75.

SALT—Is again in demand. The last cargo being only enough to create a demand, prices have stiffened considerably, 65 to 70c being now wanted with very good prospects for a further advance before the next arrives, which is expected in about 10 day.

POTATOES—Are holding steady, and are in good demand. The ruling price is $1.25 to $1.50 per bbl.

COUNTRY PRODUCE—The weather has been so fine and farmers are very busy taking care of their hay. Consequently the supply of butter, eggs and other farm produce has not been as large as usual. Prices have advanced a little for the former, though lower prices than usual are obtained for eggs.

MOLASSES—Several large lots of molasses have lately been placed on the market and prices have lowered somewhat, though a good jobbing trade is being done. Barbados is quoted at 37 to 39c. Porto Rica 35 to 36c.

SUGAR—The market remains steady, a good demand and regular prices prevail. Granulated is 4⅝ to 4¾c., yellows 3⅝. to 4⅜c.

GRAIN—Beans are selling at $1.80 to $2 per bush. Split peas per barrel $4.25 to $4.40. Barley $3.80 to $4. Oats 60 to 62c.

PROVISIONS—Beef per barrel $15.50 to $15.75. Pork, mess, $16.50 to $17.

CANNED GOODS—Our market is quite bare of certain lines of canned goods. Lobsters sell readily at $8.25 to $8.50 per case of 4 doz. Tomatoes are scarce, selling at $1.40 to $1.50 per doz., corn at $1.15 to $1.20, plums at $1.85 to $2. The demand for canned haddies is steadily increasing. They sell at $1.25 to $1.40 per doz.

NOTES.

The retail grocers of St. John have lately arrived at the conclusion that their hours are too long, and have agreed to try as an experiment closing their stores at 1 p.m. on Fridays, beginning with last Friday and up to 4th September inclusive. All spoken to say they are sorry they did not start earlier in the season, there being only one grocery open last Friday afternoon.

ADVERTISING IN TRADE JOURNALS.

In contrast with the general announcement of seasonable goods and bargains, in the dailies, the advertisements in trade publications are recognized as of more vital interest to the readers, because they refer to their daily work.

One expects to find in the trade publications advertisements of leading houses, the announcement of new machines, appliances and supplies. A knowledge of these standard machines and supplies is of importance to every business man, therefore the advertising pages of trade publications are of special importance to the paper's clientage.

While the primary object of advertising is to make immediate sales, yet in many lines of manufacture this is not the only end to be gained. The standing advertisement in trade publications gives a familiarity to the production of the advertiser, which will undoubtedly secure business at some time.

"The man who advertises his business once or twice a year," says the Western Stationer, "naturally concludes that it does not pay him. The familiar name of his competitor, who runs a display advertisement the year round in half a dozen journals, becomes insensibly stamped upon the mind of the trade, and the volume of business, by a certain instinct, drifts to him, and the less enterprising man ceases to advertise even semi-occasionally, losing the small patronage he might otherwise command."

"The dealer does not throw aside the trade journal unread. He may not order a bill of goods from every number of the journal he receives, but when he does want to stock up, it is to the trade journal he goes for information as to who and what offers him the best inducements. The more humble the business the more efforts should be made to sell your goods. There is no firm so strong, so well known, that it cannot be benefitted by judicious advertising—advertising in a class journal representing its business."

The value of the publication also depends largely upon the degree of consideration which it receives. The attention of business concerns is especially called to the advertising pages in THE CANADIAN GROCER. This journal has received great attention from leading concerns in all parts of the country. Advertising rates will be furnished on application.

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER issued weekly, subscription price $2.00 per year.

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

The merchant who has good store help ought to congratulate himself, for in that he possesses a most powerful auxiliary for the doing of a successful business. The instances are numerous enough where men in trade have made money in spite of their own business incapacity, and because of the fidelity and capability of employes. There are a great many men to-day in the forefront of commerce who laid the foundations of their eminence in the conscientious discharge of their duty to others in whose service they were. We know of stores which do what may truly be termed a clerk-made business. There is no denying the fact that the part the clerk can play in building up an enduring trade for his employer is a very large one. It is according to the extent to which a clerk is instrumental in enlarging or confirming the scope of the business his employer does, that his rating as a good, indifferent or bad shop assistant should be. By that test he should stand or fall.

* * * *

But in these times the maximum benefit is rarely got out of clerk service. There is less to assist the enthusiasm and loyalty of clerks in their employers' interests, to develop their business powers or to select the fittest men for the calling. Undoubtedly there is to-day behind the counters of Canadian stores a large number of shop salesmen who are the peers of the very best, but these are the exceptions. There is another but much larger number of clerks who are not the fully equipped men they should be, and not by any means the men they would have been were they employed in similar positions some years ago or in old country stores. There is too little in life behind the counter to induce the best raw material to take to it on a very large scale nowadays. There are young men now engaged as street car drivers who left the ranks of salesmen to accept that position. And they were not driven out by better men. Their places were taken by worse men, if willingness to accept lower pay be taken as an acknowledgment of inferiority. The men who left the stores to become street car drivers did so because they could make more money as street car drivers. They are good drivers as they would have been good clerks.

* * * *

The shop salesman is becoming, like many another of the best adjuncts of sound business, a sacrifice to the spirit of competition by which trade is possessed. Profits are little more than nominal, adulterated and inferior goods are eagerly taken up, every device whereby prices can be let down is studied. Business is increased, the labor of the shop assistant increases in direct proportion, while his rate of pay declines from the standard of sounder times accordingly. Small pay cannot purchase a high quality of service. Boys and girls consequently have to be taken to fill places that men experienced in business and skilled in human nature ought to occupy. And when these boys become men, when they ought to be ready trained shop hands, they usually betake themselves to some other occupation where their service will find better pay. Manual labor, though less, attractive is usually more remunerative, and several take to it in preference to salesmanship.

* * * *

The clerk is not only underpaid, but he is not nowadays trained in so healthy a school as he was years ago. His calling is a less dignified one, and for the reason that the whole bent of his training is to perfect him in the one art of persuading customers to believe in the incomparable cheapness of his prices. He has to make prices appear lower than those of others, rather than to know how to gain a customer's confidence and attach trade for future years. This does not tend to bring out his best parts as a business man any more than the meagre pay he receives tends to bring the best men into the work. The solid, personal qualities and business practices that are guarantees of genuineness and fair-dealing are the valuable elements in a clerk, and the ones it pays to give a good salary to keep. Brains, integrity, experience, tact and industry have still a market, even if the salesroom does not afford it, and to that market the best material will take itself. There are merchants who pay good salaries, and their wisdom is approved by its results.

* * * *

The retail grocers cry out against the wholesale grocers that the latter are so hedging themselves round that retailers have no chance to make their way into wholesale circles. The clerks have at least equal reason for exclaiming against the retailers that the latter are placing all the obstacles they can in the way of the clerks becoming master-traders. And if the ranks of the master-traders are not to be recruited from the ranks of the clerks, whence are they to be recruited? Are the farms and workshops to be the training schools of the merchants who are to succeed our present storekeepers? One reason why trade has got into its present unsatisfactory state is that too many traders have not had the benefit of a good training as clerks. Let the clerks be well paid and they will make ample return. They can easily be made one of the strongest mainstays of business. It is conceivable that clerks should organize upon the cardinal principle not to work for price-cutting employers. It would be a good way to establish a fund in retailers' profits for the adequate payment for employees' services.

WHOLESALERS WHO RETAIL.

The complaint which appears over the signature "Country Merchants" on another page is not the first one which has reached us upon the same subject within the past few days. Accusations equally express in their reference to actual transactions or overtures for business, and no less explicit in their indication of the source of this wholesale competition with retailers have been rather numerous of late. They are too numerous and circumstantial, and to well authenticated for it to be probable that any mistake has been made. We therefore feel warranted in bringing the matter before the attention of our readers, and publish the last communication upon the matter which has reached us.

The re-appearance of the question of wholesalers dealing with consumers is rather startling. It was thought to be a dead and buried issue. It seems as if the hand had gone back a decade on the dial of time to bring us into the presence of the old question which the protests of the retailers were supposed to have forever laid. The protests of the retailers were nothing more than statements of the indefensible unfairness of the practice which certain wholesalers followed in cultivating direct trade with retailers. It was because they were convinced of its unfairness that the wholesalers in question abandoned it. That fact itself is more significant, and more strongly condemns the practice than any amount of argument. The reasons why the practice ought to be decried are manifest enough, but the action of the wholesalers with reference to it makes it a matter of supererogation to set forth those reasons. It is repugnant to the moral business sense.

If a retail trader has a constituency ofcustom it is no preserve of his. He has no preferential claim upon it, no vested rights in it, aside from what he is able to establish by his business address, probity, etc. Any man may come in and open a store in the same district and carry on business in the same way. There is no poaching about that. But it is another thing when the local trader has to meet the competition of the wholesale house from which probably he buys his goods. Even if the competition introduced by the wholesaler were on equal terms so far as prices were concerned, it would still be a most unfair competition. For, to be worth looking after at all, it would involve the getting a hold of the largest local consumers, the boarding house people, hotel men and contractors. To select from the local retailer's customers the best of them is to do him a grievous wrong, even if his prices are not undermined. To open up the sources of wholesale supply and fill all the retail channels on the one hand; then, on the other, to choke up the outlets of these channels by supplying consumers, can only have the one tendency, which is to extinguish the retailers and beget a nondescript trading class, neither of the wholesale nor the retail species. When prices are lower than those at which retailers can sell, it is plain that the wholesaler who concedes them to consumers, is taking advantage, not only of his long reach as a distributor, but of his power as a wholesaler to put the consumer on the same footing as a retailer. That cannot be too strongly reprehended. It is unjust to the retail trade and most unfair to competing wholesalers, who depend upon the mediation of the retailer to sell their goods.

A singular coincidence pointed out by one correspondent is the fact that the circulars received in his neighborhood have been distributed among people who were formerly the customers of another old offender in this respect. This does not necessarily involve the inference that the list of consumers has been transferred from the former to the present transgressor of the rule that wholesalers shall not sell to consumers, but there has been some curiosity expressed by readers.

An instance of an order shipped a few days ago from another wholesale house in this city to a country milling firm has also been brought under our notice. This is probably typical of a practice not uncommon nor restricted to a house or two. It ought nevertheless to be strongly denounced by the retail trade as an infringement of their rights.

Credit is often too cheap and overbubing far too common. Don't be guilty of the one, and don't abuse the other.

"There are geniuses in trade, as well as in war, or the state, or letters; and the reason why this or that man is fortunate is not to be told. It lies in the man."—EMERSON.

SUPERCILIOUS WOMEN.

Supercilious women are a nuisance to a general storekeeper. They will go into his store, sample his goods, put him to no end of trouble to take them down and display them, and, after monopolizing a good deal of valuable time and taxing his patience they will turn away in a very contemptuous manner with the remark that they can buy the same quality of goods at a much lower price somewhere else.

They assume to know a great deal more about his business than he does himself. They are greatly given to fault finding and are very hard to please. They will return goods after they have been permitted to spoil, insinuating that the merchant knew they were unwholesome and unfit for human consumption when he sold them. In short, they occasion the average grocer an endless amount of vexation and trouble, and he feels like running and hiding himself somewhere whenever such a women enters the store. Perhaps no class of men receive more scoldings during the year than the grocer and market-man. He gets used to it after awhile and does not mind it, at least to an extent that keeps him awake nights.

A grocer once said that the two women who gave him the most trouble were a woman who wanted something he didn't have in stock and another woman who could not make up her mind what she wanted. They rarely came into his store without going away dissatisfied, and no matter how courteous, agreeable or patient he attempted to be in waiting upon them, he found it utterly impossible to please them. They made his life a dreary burden; a cold chill was sure to creep up his spine whenever he saw them coming. Probably there are few storekeepers who have not had more or less experience with women of this character. Some of our correspondents have detailed their experiences with such people in an amusing manner. They have undoubtedly made it very difficult for many men to be successful storekeepers and consistent Christians.

We never knew of but one case in which a storekeeper "got even" with a woman of this character. It is related that a somewhat supercilious female once walked into the establishment of a well-know grocer and market-man, and picking up a large lobster which lay upon the counter, held it up to her nose with the offensive remark, "It smells, sir." Suddenly the offending crustacean, which was alive and very active, fixed its claws upon the prominent proboscis of its inquisitor, who, with a scream of affright, allowed it to slip from her hand. As it hung dangling from her nose, the good-natured but unsympathetic grocer blandly inquired, "Does it smell offensive to you now?"

But it is not often that the retailer has such an opportunity of repaying the indignities heaped upon him by supercilious customers; yet there is occasionally a humerous as well as a serious side to the retail grocery bnsiness; and we imagine that there could be nothing more satisfactory to the average retailer than some unexpected incident which tends to take the superciliousness out of a woman who constantly worries him.—Criterion.

DIRECT WHOLESALE TRADE WITH CONSUMERS.

To the Editor CANADIAN GROCER.

DEAR SIR,—We notice that your paper contains the advertisements of a great many of the very best houses in the wholesale grocery trade, but we fail to see that of a party in whom we at present are much interested.

We write in the hope that you or some of your readers can give us some information, and at the same time inform our brother merchants what we know of him.

His name is F. W. Humphrey, of 64 Front street east, Toronto, and in his circulars addressed to consumers he styles himself "Importer and wholesale grocer."

We would like to know the opinion of grocers on a couple of points in connection with these circulars. In the first place, is it an honorable way of doing business for a man who has the advantage of jobbers' prices, gained through being a wholesaler, to offer to sell to consumers at prices which we, dealing with one of the most reputable firms in Canada, cannot buy underneath—in fact the best quoted wholesale prices?

Again, if this styling of "Importer and wholesale grocer" be a figure of rhetoric, could any retail merchant in your city, buying on the most advantageous terms, afford to offer, delivered free at Gravenhurst, extra bright sugar at 4½c., P. of W. tobacco at 51½c., Brier at 55c., Myrtle Navy at 61c., Japan rice at 5c., tapioca at 6c., and sago at 5c.?

We have a circular sent to one of our customers offering these, as above. We only mention a few quotations.

We have before us THE CANADIAN GROCER of 7th inst. and we see no quotations there that would justify a retail grocer in asking his tailor to trust him for a suit of clothes while he was selling goods at above figures.

We have read many articles in your paper containing advice and information to retail merchants. We believe there are many who would be glad to have you take up the subject of wholesalers supplying consumers.

Yours truly,

COUNTRY MERCHANTS.

COURTESY TO TRAVELLERS.

WIARTON, ONT., August 11, 1891.

J. B. MCLEAN, ESQ., Toronto.

DEAR SIR,—Enclosed find P. O. order for $2 in renewal of my subscription to THE CANADIAN GROCER. I have watched with a great deal of interest the growth of your paper, which is now acknowledged to be the best in Canada. Your editorial and market columns are replete with information, and your selections from leading American papers are always good. By the way, I sometimes think the wholesale prices you quote are just a little below the mark, at least it sometimes happens that they are below what I am at liberty to sell at, but as your paper is published particularly in the interests of the retail trade, I suppose it is commendable to err on the right side, or in the interests of your customers, but the trouble is the prices quoted on some things occasionally show no margin at all, and the average storekeeper is willing to swear that you are right. However, I must say that you are nearly always correct; also that you have been remarkably successful in forecasting the markets. In your issue of July 31st, you ask: "Is the salesman your friend?" Then follows an article which I entirely agree with. I am sure I but echo the sentiments of all travellers when I say that the merchant who receives us kindly and courteously is the one who gets any favors we have to offer in the way of goods or prices. I think the majority of merchants recognize this. It is a pleasure to call on some merchants, even if they do not buy from us, they have a faculty of sending us away feeling quite happy, but I am free to admit that we feel happier when we have the order booked, especially if we had counted upon it. There are some merchants who are discourteous and ungentlemanly in their manner. Happily the number is few. Such men only get the common 'vittles;' they do not get the 'dessert,' but what they deserve. Certainly the most successful merchants are those who are polite and courteous in all their intercourse. I scarcely think it possible that a man can make a permanent success of storekeeping who fails to observe those rules.

Yours truly,

F. W. VANLAVEN,
of Stuart Harvey & Co.

A misprint occurs in a paragraph which appeared in last week's issue. It was that in which P. J. Wall, a London grocer, was said to be in financial difficulties. The name should have read P. J. Watt. What makes the error an unfortunate one is the fact that there is a London grocer whose name is Wall, Mr. C. J. Wall, whose financial standing is unquestioned. We apologize to Mr. Wall for an apparent reflection upon his solvency.

WHAT ARE RAW SUGARS?

Professor Cameron, public analyst of the city of Dublin, who has examined samples of raw sugar, states that they contained great numbers of disgusting insects, which produce a disgusting disease. Their shape is very accurately shown in the accompanying figures, magnified two hundred diameters, Fig. 1 is the under side and Fig. 2 is the upper side. His description is as follows:—

"The Acarus sacchari is a formidably organized, exceedingly lively, and decidedly ugly little animal. From its oval shaped body stretches forth a proboscis terminating in a kind of scissor, with which it seizes upon its food. Its organs of locomotion consist of eight legs, each jointed and furnished at its extremity with a hook. In the sugar, its movements from one place to another are necessarily very slow, but when placed on a perfectly clean and dry surface, it moves along with great rapidity."

He adds that "the number of Acari found in raw sugar is sometimes exceedingly great, and in no instance is the article quite free from either the insects or their eggs." "Muscovado, as it comes from the colonies, should never be used."

He further says: "The Acari sacchari do not occur in refined sugar of any quality, because they cannot pass through the charcoal filters of the refinery, and because refined sugar does not contain any nitrogenous substance upon which they could feed."

The neglect to look after minute details in the factory is a source of great loss to many producers.

Competition is keen and active, and the only way to meet it successfully is to buy from the best houses, and at lowest prices.

MONTREAL GROCERS' PICNIC.

Everyone pronounced the Montreal grocers' picnic, of the 5th inst., the best ever held, and rightly so because there was a tangible improvement on the pic-nics of former years. It is a recognised fact that the grocers' pic-nic is the pic-nic of the year, and this one was a more decided success than its predecessors. The grocers' never do things by halves; all went to Berthierville with the firm intention of enjoying themselves, and none were discoverable who did not fully carry out this intention.

At eight o'clock a train consisting of eight coaches and a baggage car, left Dalhousie station with about 600 persons on board, under the charge of Mr. Ibbotson, outside passenger agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Another train followed in about half an hour with an equal number on board. Berthierville was reached about eleven o'clock, and in a few minutes afterwards everyone was making himself at home in the Manor grounds. It is in keeping with the fitness of things that those who stand between the city and starvation should be well fed themselves, and if the multitude of fat baskets and hampers that were carried up to the grounds is any criterion, all fared well.

The Manor grounds, or Cuthbert grove, as they are sometimes called, are well suited for pic-nicing purposes, the only drawback being that they are a little too distant from the city. Many historic associations are connected with them in regard to the early history of the country, they being the seat of Berthier seigniory, which came into the possession of the Cuthbert family in 1765. The ruins of the old Manor house are still to be seen in the midst of the grounds, and near by is the first Protestant chapel built in Canada. It is of stone and still in a good state of preservation. The builder was the Hon. James Cuthbert, who erected it in 1785 to shelter the remains of his wife. The magnificent elm and butternut trees of the old park provide grateful shade, and the lawns and drives are suitable for games and sports of all kinds. The park is situated on the banks of a placidly picturesque stream, flowing into the St. Lawrence, called the Boyonne, and is about two miles from the town proper. The river provides splendid facilities for boating, being deep and sluggish. Several steam yachts were on hand to carry the pleasure-seekers to the town, and carriages were on hand for the same purpose, the drive to the town being quite pretty. The town is pretty, but it is open to the same objection as most French-Canadian towns—narrow streets. Soon after the arrival on the grounds baskets were spread and the contents discussed with appetite. A large tent was erected on the grounds, where lunch was served to the members of the committees and others. Messrs. Hall & Scott were the caterers. It was a good lunch and was well appreciated. Afterwards a short list of toasts was ably discussed. The president, Mr. Edward Elliott, occupied the chair and the vice-chairs were ably filled by Mr. Stanislas Demers, vice-president, and Mr. A. D. Fraser, honorary secretary. Among those at the tables were Ald. Rolland, Gauthier, Brunet, M.L.A., and Savignac. Letters of regret at being unable to attend were read by Mr. Fraser from Hon. J. A. Chapleau, Mr. J. J. Curran, Q.C., M.P.; Hon. L. O. Taillon, Ald. Cunningham and Ald. Stevenson. Mr. Fraser submitted the toast of "Our guests," which was ably responded to by Ald. Rolland, Mr. George Wait and Ald. Jeannotte. "The Town of Berthierville" called ex-Mayor Tranchemontagne, Mr. McConnell and Ald. Savignac, of Montreal, to their feet, and each made a pleasing speech. "The Grocers' Association" was responded to by Ald. Gauthier, Mr. Laporte, Mr. John Robertson, and Mr. Fred Hughes, president of the Dominion Commercial Travellers' Association. "The Press" and "The Ladies" were responded to by Mr. E. H. Tellier, editor of the Courier, of Louisville, and Mr. Charbonneau, of La Presse.

This part of the programme finished, the sports and games were entered into with zest. The list of events—27 in all—was rather lengthy, however, and there was scarcely time to carry it out.

Under the guidance of Mr. Montaigue a number of the guests paid a short visit to the defunct beet root sugar factory in the evening and were shown through it. Afterwards the town was visited, and many of the pic-nickers enjoyed the hospitality of Mayor and Mrs. Lamarche at their pretty residence overlooking the Berthier river. About 7 o'clock the early train left and arrived in the city about 10 o'clock. The other train was over an hour later in reaching the city. Everyone was tired, but not sorry for it, for they had all spent a good time.

The Victoria Rifles band, Blasis' orchestra and two Highland pipers provided plenty of beautiful music during the day. The dancing pavilion was well patronized.

LONDON GROCERS' PIC-NIC.

On the 5th inst., promptly at one o'clock, headed by the Seventh Band, the London grocers' procession started from the Market Square. It was one of the prettiest and most novel parades ever seen in London. Fully 60 rigs were in line, in the decoration of which artistic genius had been applied most happily. The inscription on one of the unembellished vehicles was witty and caused amusement. "Business brisk; no time to decorate," was the way it read. Some of the ornamentations were elaboratively handsome. One enterprising merchant had four little girls in his rig partaking of afternoon tea from a well-set table. Another had a minstrel on board playing a guitar, and a third a canine, elegantly clothed, shaded with an umbrella, and perched at a lofty height. With so much evidence of taste and pretty effect it would be invidious to make individual mention.

Upon arrival at the scene of action the gaily festooned rigs paraded around the race track and made a charming appearance. Judges Dr. Gardiner, J. W. Jones and John Fairgrieves experienced a great deal of difficulty in awarding the prizes for the best turnout with so much excellence to decide upon, but finally A. Tytler, J. N. Tamlin, F. Barnard, Ferguson & Co. and H. Winder, wereannounced as possessors of the best ornamented vehicles.

It is calculated that with the late additions, the grand stands have a seating capacity of over 7,000. They were all jammed and many could not gain admittance: This gives some idea of the size of the gathering, which amounted to about 8000. The chief interest, however, centered in the athletic events, and a programme of length, variety and unsurpassed merit, was provided for the assembled thousands, and carried through expeditiously. The prizes were valuable enough to bring out a plenitude of competitors and give the successful ones reason to rejoice. The contests were all interesting, chief among them being the grand chase for the greasy pig, the obsticle horse, ladies' and fat men's races, and the Irish jig and hornpipe dancing. Following is a complete list of events and prize-winners:

Young men's race, 100 yards—1 Gibbons, 2 Garvey, 3 O'Dell.

Sack race, 100 yards—1 Altman, 2 Tierney, 3, Gatecliffe.

Hornpipe, open to the world—1 Wilson, 2 Templeton.

Catching greasy pig—Parry.

Quoiting match, for outsiders—1 Errington, 31 ; 2 W. Bell, 19.

Shoe race—Jimmie Jupp.

The one mile trotting race for horses which had been driven for three months in delivery wagons was an exciting one. There were five entries, Wood's "Wellington Star," Gourd's "Maud," Winder's "Nellie," Thornton's "Gipsy" and Barnard's "Maud B." "Wellington Star" won in two straight heats, "Maud was second and "Nellie" third. The time of the winner in the second heat was announced on the board as 2.08. The record was considered "remarkable" by the crowd.

The half-mile running race, for horses owned by grocers' at least three months previous to race, was very entertaining. R. S. Copeland's horse won easily, with Murphy's second and Shea's a good third.

Thos. Hutchinson was starter, and J. W. Jones, H. Dreaney and R. Hueston the judges in the horse races.

A special 50 yard race for grocers over 50 years of age was won by R. S. Copeland, the prize being a gold-headed cane.

Among other interesting events was a baseball match between the north and south sides of Dundas street, viewed by a large crowd of spectators. Score :

DETAILS.

To most men details are irksome, and that is probably the chief cause for the failure of the many and the success of the few. The mastery of any subject, profession or calling is impossible without a thorough grasp of details. The want of a shadow may spoil a picture otherwise perfect ; failure to know a road, or to post a sentinel may lose a battle; that twice one are two must be learned before difficult mathematical problems can be solved. And yet how we rebel against the application and energy demanded in the acquisition of rudiments or details ! Now and then we meet a man who is called a "born genius," and yet the world's history and our experience teaches that the so-called genius is master by dint of hard work and application. For instance, Edison.

Plain as is the fact, conscious as we are of its truth, we are painfully conscious of an inward rebellion against detail. It is easier to jump at a conclusion than to reach it by reasoning. We aim to "get rich in a hurry," rather than patiently work, save and acquire. And all the time there is before us the practical demonstration that the leaders in all the walks of life have won their honors by dint of patient toil, slow but steady growth. Successful merchants are not born great, but have acquired greatness because of their mastery of the little things, the obnoxious, wearisome, worrying, incessant, provoking details.

Unfortunately there are many who think they can become merchants without previous training. They claim that "any one can sell goods," utterly oblivious that buying as well as selling is an art ; that experience is a school, that training is discipline, that there is a business alphabet to be acquired, failing which there can be no progress, no success. Such soon come to grief, their numbers swelling, far too fast, the long list of bankrupts.

There is another class, and we regret their large numbers ; those who have had their early training and experience, and still neglect—details. They work, and work hard, year in and year out, and never forge ahead. We recall those who have been in business in one locality for ten, twenty, and even forty years, and are no better off, if as well conditioned, as when they started. They have ignored details. Year after year rolls away and no inventory is taken. Goods are bought and received without the thought of checking them off by the invoice to see if all that is to be paid for has come to hand, or whether the count, weight, measure or gauge is correct. They are utterly oblivious of what margin of profit they are getting ; the relation of the expense account to gross profits ; the proportion of the sale of any one article to all goods in stock. Railway charges and classifications are not examined to see if freights are properly adjusted. There is no well defined system of keeping accounts. The stock is poorly arranged and no means adopted to check the accumulation of old stock or avoid being overstocked. There are leaks innumerable, for there is no check upon the cash, nor upon goods sold upon credit to see if they are properly charged ; the clerks are unrestrained, and there is pilfering and waste at every turn and all the time.

The only remedy for these ever present evils is in a thorough mastery of detail. That it is possible to cover every feature of a business by a thorough system has been practically demonstrated over and over again. Next week we will present the history of a large general store, where there is an almost perfect supervision of details carried so far as to keep an account with each of nearly 1,200 articles kept in stock, besides analyzing the class of customers served. Elsewhere in this number we reproduce from a Western contemporary an article, "Make a Profit," which is in thorough harmony with our oft-repeated views and which is of direct interest in connection with details.

Unless a man is master of his own business the business will master him. Ruin and mortification are the rewards of inattention to the minutiæ of life's work.—American Grocer.

PUSH NEEDED IN BUSINESS.

It is an assured fact nowadays that if you intend to make money you must take hold of something ; you must devote your work, your time, your skill, your experience and whatever money you have to something. To very few indeed does a fortune come by merely waiting for it. And these fortunes themselves are the results of previous years of labor.

Caution is indeed a great thing in investment, but, as in everything else, there can be too much of it. The man who is too cautious in his business policy runs a greater risk of being ruined by missing golden opportunities than one who is seemingly reckless in his undertakings. Conservatism of the genuine sort should be the characteristic of every legitimate business man ; aggressiveness, however, in any line of commerce, enlarges to a thousand fold the possibilities of success, while at the same time permitting of the employment of conservative methods.

Gambles in trade or in any other sphere of activity generally come to grief. The genuine business man is a speculator ; he is no gambler. He takes risks, but they are warranted by the necessities of his enterprises. He, also, often comes to grief, but his ruin only emphasizes the mistakes that should be avoided by others.

Any man who wishes to invest has lots of good chances. But we must act ; and by rightly acting he will win. —Journal of Finance.

THE MIDDLE-MAN IN TRADE.

The statement will not be disputed that in marketing the great bulk of manufactured products the producer to-day deals directly with the consumer. Exceptions will be found in the case of food products and articles intended for personal use, or for domestic purposes, but even here the producer is brought closer to the consumer than was once the case, as sales are made largely from the factory to the retail store. The middle-man, whether he be a jobber, a a broker or a commission merchant, has been overshadowed and shorn of his importance by the multiplication of factories and their distribution over a much wider area. It is easy and perhaps natural to deduce the broad inference and the tendency in trade is to the gradual extinction of middle-men. This idea is encouraged to a great extent by the huge growth of direct trading, and the apparent confinement of the middle-men within certain limits. It is however, encouraged fully as much by one's own inborn preference or prejudice, which leads him to endeavour to buy from "first hands" whenever possible, and to avoid paying a profit to any others who are merely in the line of distribution. Even the middle-men themselves always seek principles when they desire to make purchases. The complete extinction of the middle-man is the dream of a very large class of people, with whom "the wish is father to the thought.

And yet with the apparently steady progress toward closer relations between producer and consumer, it is unmistakable that middle-men occupy a position of permanence. Better qualifications are of course necessary now than the mere possession of capital and business connections. The business man who to-day ventures to stand between the manufacturer and the retailer and extract a profit from what trade he can divert through his own hands needs to be blessed with a keen insight into methods and processes and channels of trade, as well as the power of foresight with regard to the operation of current commercial influences. There are men in the iron trade to-day who are able to conduct a large business in which they derive profit from merely buying and selling and are neither manufacturers nor distributors. It is sometimes gratuitously assumed by those who buy from them that such middle-men are unnecessary and are in fact a weight on legitimate trade. In one sense they are a weight, but it is in the sense of a balance weight, in which case they are most useful to sellers. Take, for instance, the dealers in old railway material, who form an important class of middle-men. When the mills are supplied with such stock or hesitate to take in more, the dealers are very useful to the railroads, and will often take risks of an unfavorable turn in the market that a consumer would by no means care to assume. It is possible that this function is not specially agreeable to consumers, but it certainly must be to producers or sellers, who also have a right to be considered as parties to a transaction.

Middle-men make themselves of value in both directions—to manufacturers or producers, as well as to retailers or consumers—and they will never become extinct, even if all manufacturers combined against them to avoid paying commissions on sales, and if all consumers endeavored to go as nearly as they could to "first hands." The bright wits of the born traders who take up the avocation of middle-men will find openings for themselves, and they will extract profits in spite of the unfriendliness of one side or the undisguised hostility of the other.—Iron Age.

A SUGAR WAR.

"Granulated sugar sold Tuesday for the lowest price at which it ever has been offered in the history of the sugar business. It was offered by the Spreckels Philadelphia Company at 4 cents a pound, with a 2 per cent discount for cash. In the absence of H. O. Havemeyer, the President of the Sugar Trust, who was attending his father's funeral a few days ago, the Spreckels Company made a reduction in the price of this quality of from 1 cent to 1 1-16 cents a pound. Mr. Havemeyer did not return to the office of the trust until Monday, when he saw the Spreckels reduction, and made a further cut in the price of one-eighth of a cent a pound. On Monday afternoon Spreckels went another sixteenth of a cent below the trust rate, and Tuesday morning the Havemeyers made an equal cut. Tuesday afternoon Mr. Spreckels anthorized the sale of granulated sugar at 4 cents a pound, with a 2 per cent reduction for cash, equivalent to 3.92 cents per pound. When the business day ended, Mr. Spreckels was still offering the lowest rate. Whether or not the trust people will make a further reduction depends wholly on whether they think more of a high profit than they do of defeating their most bitter antagonist.

From the above, which appeared in the Boston Journal on Wednesday, a wrong impression of the true state of affairs might easily be obtained; as well as the statement of the Herald on Wednesday morning, which said that Spreckels is after the Trust with a sharp stick. The actual facts of the matter are as follows:—The Franklin Sugar Refinery—Harrison, Frazer & Co.—of Philadelphia, it seems, had accumulated a large surplus of sugar, and were overloaded. This concern is an independent refinery and is not in the Trust. Thinking it would be money in their pockets to unload their surplus of sugar even at a low price rather than carry it at a cost, they began to offer at cut rates. As a result the Trust, wishing to head off Harrison, Frazer & Co., selected Spreckels, because his refinery is right on the same stamping ground, so to speak, that is, in Philadelphia, where Harrison, Frazer & Company are located. Spreckels' refinery, although the public are not generally aware of it, is a part and parcel of the trust, and has been since Speckels formed a stock company, when Havemeyer was the heaviest buyer of the stock. So this cutting between the Trust and Spreckels was an understood thing, a move to head off Harrison, Frazer & Co. The prices declined until Harrison, Frazer & Co. stopped cutting, which they did because they could not afford to sell their sugar and follow trust cut rates. They had better hold it. The market is stronger to-day; and the exact variation in the last three days will be seen by our sugar card.

The Standard Sugar Refinery here followed the trust, of course, and as a result were able to unload a large amount of sugar, as the grocers nearly all bought heavily while the lowest cut rate lasted. The market is already stronger, now that the refineries have made up their minds that it is better for them to carry their sugar than to unload at such a low price. The trade here is not at all anxious to see sugar back at 4 cents; still, it is probable that the trade will not see a normal market until the next new sugar comes to hand about next December.—N. E. Grocer.

THE SALMON OUTLOOK.

Advices from the Fraser River, of the most reliable description, are by no means of a favorable character. It appears to be beyond all question that the salmon pack will be small, and that the results will be a source of disappointment and loss to all concerned. This loss will not only be entailed by the comparative idleness of the plant with which the canneries are supplied, but considerable quantities of cans, cases and other material already prepared will be required to be held over. The canner will undoubtedly be a sufferer, inasmuch, as a rule, he is not accustomed to carry over stocks of fish, and cannot benefit by the advance; but the middleman and the dealer will hardly fail to be advantaged, as the value of their stocks must be materially enhanced. They have been mostly laid in at a comparatively low figure, and must go up, the difference enuring to the holder, who is likely to make a good thing out of it. There is one mistake to be guarded against, and that is that should there be a late run—of which there appears to be some probability—the canners, with a view to utilizing their material and employing their hands, may use every endeavor to make up for lost time, and catch and pack all the fish that is possible for them to do. This would hardly be good policy, as it would tend to keep the market in a demoralized state, and to continue the existing unsatisfactory condition of the trade, which a little waiting would in all probability be the means of resuscitating. There are many packers who feel gloomy and look gloomy, too. Let them look ahead and make up their minds to build upon the future.—B. C. Commercial Journal.

HOW TO SUCCEED AS A GROCER.

A writer in the London Grocer says: "I served my apprenticeship, as you know, to the grocery business, and since then I have worked for four years as an assistant in the co-operative stores. I am now 25, and earn precisely that number of shillings per week. What do you advise me to do? I see no prospect of becoming anything more than head assistant at 30s. per week if I stay here all my days, and I must frankly confess the thought of it appals me, for I started life with some ambitious hopes.

"I haven't capital to start on my own account, unless in a very small way, and in these days of big firms and co-operative stores the small beginner has no chance, unless he can take over some prosperous old-established business; and such a business is not a drug in the market just now. What can I—what ought I do?" So wrote a friend to me the other day.

Everyone at all acquainted with the subject would admit that my friends case is only one among very many Thousands of young fellows who have spent three or four years as apprentices to the grocery, drapery or similar trade find themselves in similar circumstances when they have reached man's estate. It is not to much to say that every youth, when first he dons an apron and stands behind a counter, pictures himself at 25, if not earlier, either as the manager to some big firm or the proud proprietor of a shop doing a good business, behind which is a comfortably furnished house—a nest for a wife and prospective family—and,may be, the majority of the town in prospective. But in how few cases are these dreams realized! Twenty-five finds the dreamer still an assistant, for even if he can command a little capital, if he has a modicum of prudence, he fears to embark with it on the troublous seas of competition.

Hardly anyone will gainsay the fact that competition is so fierce that a small business, that is not old-established, has not the ghost of a chance of success. One outcome of competition is the great increase of joint-stock methods of trading. Co-operative stores, the rapid development of the parcel post system of trading, and the multiplycation of such firms as John Smith & Co.—with their central establishment in some large town and fifty branch shops in the district round, and who can spend hundreds on advertising—render it sheer lunacy for a man with small capital to start a new business on the old method; for, of course, the big firms can buy largely, and as a consequence, completely undersell the struggling new beginner.

True, if a new shop is opened and the proprietor announces that he will give credit he will not lack customers; but anyone with a grain of sense knows that to start a business on the credit system is the very broadest nnd easiest path to the bankruptcy court.

Summing up what I have already said, it amounts to this: Firstly, that without a young man does embark in business on his own account while young, unless extraordinary circumstances intervene, he must content himself with an assistant's office—and wages—all his life. Secondly, big firms and co-operative enterprises render it almost impossible for a small new business, conducted on conservative lines, to succeed. Thirdly, to start with the credit system is madness.

What then do I advise: I cannot give my advice in better form than by quoting in full the letter I sent to my friend, in reply to the one quoted above.

"Dear G.—I sympathize with you in your difficulty, and will express my sympathy by giving you the best advice in my power. Firstly, close your career as assistant as soon as possible.

"You have, I understand, £100 of your own, and you can borrow enough from your father to take a small business. I know a business, established fifteen years, which you could purchase complete for £300 to £350. Little trade is done in the town proper, but a fair amount is done in the villages round. With energy you might make £2 or £3 a week clear.

"But my recipe for success is this: Make one certain article—an article of your own manufacture, if possible—your specialty. Let it be a genuine article, not rubbish. You will find even in these days of sham and chicanery, that honesty pays.

"Set this article out permanently and call your customers' attention to it. Have circulars printed and sent round the district asking the people to try it, and advertise its merits in the local paper. If it be good there will soon be a demand for it. Set aside the profits you make from it in order to advertise in your county, especially the larger towns in the county. Offer it to the tradesmen in your district at special rates. When you have established its reputation and created a demand for it in the country, spend the profits in spreading forth its virtues over the length and breadth of the land.

"This is a recipe that, providing the article has any merit and you advertise judiciously, cannot fail. You hardly need to be told that the proprietors of certain pills and soaps began at the foot of the ladder and adopted similar methods to those I advise. But let me give you an instance of the success of this method with which I am personally acquainted, and which I can vouch for, as it happened, or rather is happening, in this town.

"Mr. H. is a grocer who five years ago did just enough business to keep his head above water—a slight diminution of business and he must have gone under. Just then he began, in a small way, the making of an article which I will call pork pies (near enough to the real article for the purpose of illustration). There was no doubt but that the pies were good, made with scrupulous cleanliness, and of the very best materials. They soon acquired a name in the district, and then H. sought a larger constituency. He advertised in the papers of two large towns some fifty miles distant, and occasionally acted as his own commercial traveler. I will not trouble you with further details; sufficient to say that he now employs a dozen hands solely for the pie trade, he has laid down machinery, and last Christmastide made and sold nearly two tons of pies. The grocery department is also growing, and H. is on the high road to fortune. That is just the method I wish you to adopt, and I am confident that if you do so your efforts will be crowned with a like success."

If you want books, it is rarely wise to pay double price for them to a travelling book-seller.

The result was that he received a bad fracture of the right leg, which is broken in two places.

WHY CO-OPERATIVE STORES FAIL HERE.

Distributive co-operation has been, perhaps, brought before the public most prominently through the success of the so-called co-operative stores in England, says B. F. Thurber in the July North American Review, but such stores, strange to say in this country have not been a success, although other forms of co-operation here have succeeded admirably. The reason, however, is probably found in the different conditions. In England the retail trade had grown into a system of long credits. Many landed proprietors and others received their incomes only at long intervals, and this led retail merchants into the habit of selling a large portion of their trade on long time, which inevitably resulted in considerable losses from bad debts; so the dealers had to raise their margins of profit upon all their customers to a point which would still leave a living. This was virtually making the cash-paying customer support the customer who did not pay at all; and when this abuse became extended the persons with fixed incomes who paid their debts naturally objected, and the result was the formation of societies for co-operative distribution on an economical cash basis.

THE MAN BEHIND THE COUNTER.

This individual has it in his power to create or destroy trade, and it is for that reason why every employer should exercise the closest scrutiny as to the character of those they employ, particularly as to the temperament and disposition of employees. A man may be an early riser, attentive to business, industrious and sober, and yet a most undesirable salesman. One of the most important matters to be taken into consideration when employing a salesman, is whether or not he is good natured and obliging. If he lacks these two very essential qualifications, then he lacks the principal ingredients that go to make up a successful salesman. The disobliging sour-faced and ill-natured clerk will wreck any business, if he is employed long enough; and all the advertising in the world will not help matters. If there is one thing more than another that irritates and annoys, it is to be waited upon by an ill-natured clerk. One such experience is enough for the average person, when they invariably go elsewhere for supplies. The majority of persons will never say anything or make any complaint, but they transfer their patronage elsewhere just the same. This is usually a very effective remedy, and a satisfactory one. This is forcibly illustrated with the traveling salesman, who will always give a hotel the "go-by," if not "boycott" it, and all on account of a surly, impertinent specimen of humanity behind the hotel desk as an excuse for a clerk. It is a safe plan to always avoid the disobliging clerk, to the extent of withdrawing one's patronage from the store where he is employed. Anyone who would knowingly employ or retain in his employ one of those miserable creatures, is not deserving of success.—Grocers' Monthly Review.

TORONTO, August 13, 1891.

GROCERIES.

Trade, like history, repeats itself, and is now going through its usual August experience. In the dog-days and sultry weather trade cannot but languish. It is surely at the minimum of dulness now in all lines but sugar, and sugar is no longer the exciting commodity that it was. The prospects for the fall's trade are now engaging attention. The question, "How are the crops in your part of the country?" is asked of every fresh arrival from rural districts, and is not a mere formula either. There is very deep interest in the question, and the answer pleases or disappoints very appreciably. The general run of the reports from the country is exceedingly hopeful, and it is already beginning to inspire trade with a sanguine feeling. Crops are good both here and in the North-West, and if their appearance does not belie them and their promise be not frustrated, there will be the material in the country for the basis of a big exchange for the next year.

CANNED GOODS.

There is little excitement attending the opening market for the new pack. Retailers are inquiring and placing orders as well, but there is no impetuous eagerness to secure stock. Evidently the situation is not considered to have sufficiently outlined itself, and is too much enveloped in the mists of possibility for buyers to be sure of it. Last year at this time there was more business booked than there is now, but it could scarcely be owing to more pronounced features being discernible. And the early bird got the worm too last year. Opening prices have nothing discouraging about them, but the disposition seems to be to hang back. This means that jobbers will have a large share of the gains or losses that the near future may bring forth than they had a year ago, the early buying of the retailers having put the latter in for a large proportion of the benefit which an advance brought to the pockets of holders. The tomato crop has every appearance of being a good one, if its promise does not miscarry. The weather for the development of plant and fruit has been the very best that mere growth could be favored by. It has been cool and sufficiently moist. And now the weather we are having in August seems to be admirably suited to the ripening stage of the vegetable. Heat and a few showers ought, if there is no frost, to bring one of the largest crops to the hand of the packer that we have seen for some years. Corn is also expected to be a good crop, and a full pack of peas is believed to have been realized. New pack vegetables are unchanged at $1.05 to $1.10.

The salmon pack cannot yet be weighed and measured. The situation is so far only the resultant of conflicting reports concerning the run, with, it must be owned, the bulk of testimony on the side of a short run. Private advices from the Pacific coast on Saturday are as follows: "At Alert bay and Nass river the run is an entire failure, and there is no chance for more fish from these waters. Skeena river and River's Inlet have a fairly good run, but it is not up to that of a year ago. The pack on the Skeena up to the 22nd July averages from 8,500 to 9,000 cases to each canner. The run was very heavy for two days, then it fell off entirely and may improve later. The run on the Fraser is still poor, and so far canners have only one-third of the fish they had at the same date a year ago. Summed up, the pack of British Columbia must be very far short of last season's."

New Crown lobster are on the market to sell at $2.25.

The British Columbia journal of the 4th inst. says:—

There was an improvement in fishing in the Fraser for a few days last week, but it has dropped off again, and the catch continues light. Reports by SS. Islander, from the North, are very favorable. It is stated that the Standard Canning Co. have put up over 10,000 cases; Cunningham, Port Essington, over 10,000 cases; R. Cunningham & Son, Lowe Inlet, 4,000 cases; and the Wannuck Packing Co., Rivers Inlet, 10,390. The run in the Skeena is very good, but the Naas, at last accounts, is a failure.

An Astoria, Or., dispatch of July 30th, says: "The heavy shortage in the 1891 salmon pack bids fair to be much less than has been predicted, and if the August catch comes anywhere near that of the past ten days, the pack will be about the same as last year. Canners men estimate the pack at the present time at from 20,000 to 60,000 cases short of that of a corresponding period last season, a majority of the canners stating that the shortage will not exceed 30,000 cases. The light pack at the Cascades has been the prime factor in causing this shortage, as it is said to be 65,000 cases short of last season. Last week the run was very good, and some of the gill-net men reported as high as 118 fish in a single night, but this run has slacked away again, and many boats came in to-day with but three or four fish. The high boat for season so far known, has in but 1,600 fish, and many boats have not 500.

COFFEE.

Good Rio coffees are not too plentiful. The demand runs after such coffees and finds the market lacking in certain of the finer grades. Prices are firm, green Rio quoting from 21 to 22½c., with 20c. the lowest point for Java and 32c. for Mocha.

DRIED FRUIT.

The quantity of Valencia raisins on hand appears to be large, and a good proportion of it is low grade stock. It is improbable that the market will be bare to receive new crop stock, unless purchasing becomes more active than it is at present. Prices still favor buyers, running from 4½ to 6c. Currants are firm. There is no marked improvement in the demand, that continuing to be fairly good. Prices are unchanged. Barrels are 6¼ to 6½c., and half-barrels 6⅜ to 6¾c. for Provincials. Prunes are dull and weak at 6¼c. upwards for cases. Dried fruits are perhaps receiving less attention because of the large yield of native fruits.

NUTS.

The nut trade offers little matter for comment. It is a very quiet trade just now, and in seasonable lines stocks are full. Prices are unchanged.

RICE AND SPICES.

Rice goes out at a moderately active rate, with no change in prices. Japan continues to be in few hands. In spices the trade is quiet yet. Cloves have been the object of considerable cutting since the last shipment arrived, some dealers going as low as 12c. This price is exceptional and abnormal, however. The ruling range is 15 to 25c.

SUGAR.

The same hot haste and enforced delay that were features of the business in granulated sugar for several weeks have now given place to a normal state of things. Nearly all the contracts undertaken in June and July are now filled by the jobbers who are free to attend to the demand which springs from current wants. Orders for immediate shipment are not longer put at the tail of a long procession of big orders taken a month or six weeks ago. They receive in most cases prompt attention. Granulated is unchanged at 5c. for quantities of not less than 15 barrels and 5⅛c. for smaller quantities. The market in New York gave way towards the close of last week, but recovered on Monday and brought the price up to 4¼c. This market made no corresponding changes, but remained firm at the prices quoted, but is now all the firmer of course on account of the advance of New York granulated and of raw. Yellows here are easier. There are no N. B's., but the lowest branded is down to 4c. The stock on the market is large, while the demand still preponderates for granulated. Yellows are weaker accordingly. Raws are selling at 3¾ to 4c. for Trinidad and 4⅜ to 4½c. for Demeraras.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

The trade in syrups is light, the demand being a small matter and the stock still being limited to medium and bright grades, which are unchanged in quotation. Local business is dull in molasses. The shortage in the West Indies supply is beginning to tell on prices which are firmer at the islands. Trinidad advices are to the effect that the demand is large, prices firm and stock scant. Nearly all the Barbadoes molasses is out of first hands. Only small lots of molasses are available at any of the islands.

A cargo of 800 puncheons of West Indies molasses, consigned to Musson & Morrow of this city, was received from the barque Sabrino, at Montreal, and will be offered for sale in a few days.

MARKETS—Continued.

TEAS.

There is more activity in the tea market, but business is not yet up to the level of the usual activity at this season. Prices are easier than they were a year ago, owing to the fact that there are more consignees on this market and that there are also more shippers. The lowest grades of Japan are looked for, and are expected to sell well. The first shipment of Northern Congou reached this market last week. They will sell at from 25 to 50c. Some new Nagasaki Japans came in at the beginning of the week. They quote at 18 and 20c.

PETROLEUM.

The market is in the same dull condition that it was in a week ago. Prices are unchanged, Canadian continuing week at 15 to 16c.

The Petrolia Advertiser reports : Petrolia crude $1.34½ per bbl. ; Oil Springs crude $1.34½ per bbl. The oil market at this particular season of the year is very quiet, transactions being very few. Yesterday there were no deals whatever, and consequently no change in the price. The drill continues active, and several small wells have been struck since our last report. Not until the close of the present month or beginning of next may we look for any material change in prices. Refined keeps about the same, and will likely do so until next month, viz.: 12¼ to 12½c.

DRUGS AND CHEMICALS.

The summer trade has been a much smaller one than dealers looked for, cool weather being the chief drawback. This week's trade has been rather better than its predecessors of the past month and a half. Carbolic acid is easier from 35 to 45c., as is insect powder also at 35 to 45c. There are no other changes.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

The supply of good dairy tub butter is falling off with warmer weather and the continuance of easy prices. There is no interest rest taken in this market upon export account, as prices are still on an easier basis in the United States, and there is little disposition among country holders to sell in the present state of the market. There is a considerable quantity of butter here, but it was purchased sometime ago. Those who have to depend upon the current supply are not well stocked. Commission men are doing next to nothing in dairy tub, and no transactions in creamery tub have been reported. The arrivals of pound rolls are somewhat shorter. Dairy tub is 14 to 15c., with the latter price more commonly paid than it was a week ago. Pound rolls are 15 to 16½c., and in some cases 17c., while there are a few large rolls at 14 to 15c. Creamery tub is 19c., and rolls are 20 to 21c.

Cheese remains firm, and in comparatively active demand at 9¼ to 9¾c.

DRIED APPLES—Call for no remarks, no trade having been heard of in them. Quotations are still 8½ to 9c.

EVAPORATED APPLES—Quote nominally at 13½ to 14c.

EGGS—Have weakened down to 12 and 13c., with the bulk of the business at 12½c. Hot weather has reduced consumption.

HAY—Receipts are liberal, the remains of the old crop appear to be large and prices accordingly do not go up. Quebec has furnished a considerable proportion of the receipts lately, the United States market being a poor one just now. Prices are $11 to $12 for baled hay.

HIDES—are 5c. to 5½c. for No. 1 green, the latter price being paid for steers. Cured are rather dull at 6c.

HONEY—sells slowly at 7 to 10c. for clear and 14 to 16c. for sections.

HOPS—The residue of the 90 crop goes out quietly at unchanged prices, namely, at 35 to 37c. There will be little or none of it left by the time new crop stock is to hand.

POTATOES—The market still rules low, $1 per barrel being the price most generally holding, though that has been shaded in some cases.

SKINS—are unchanged at 40c. for pelts and 50c. for lambskins.

STRAW—is scarce and unchanged at $6 to $8.

WOOL—is dull and plentiful at 18 to 19c.

FISH.

White fish and salmon trout are getting scarce, and have gone up half a cent. The price now is 6½ to 7c. There is some pickerel in stock, also at 6½ to 7c. There is no pike yet. Lake herring are higher, quoting now at $1.75 to $2. Trade is quiet.

GREEN FRUIT.

Hot weather has been beneficial to trade, which on that account comes in for a better report this week. The popular palate is becoming cloyed with the season's other fruits, and some reaction has begun in favor of green fruit. Prices are unchanged. Lemons are weak in New York where there is an accumulation of them. Here they quote at $4.75 for Massenias and $4.50 for Palermos. Sorrento oranges are $4.50. Bananas are $1.25 to $1.50.

SMALL FRUITS, ETC.

Red raspberries and red and black currants are done. Black raspberries are 8½c., California plums are $2.50. Clingstone peaches are up to 75c. a basket, California peaches are $1.75, Delaware freestones are $1.50 in half bushel baskets. Bartlett pears are $3.50 in cases and kegs. United States tomatoes are $1, while natives are $1.50 in bushel crates. Apples are $2.25 to $2.75 per barrel. Cucumbers are 25c., and are ceasing to be handled by fruit houses. The trade in fruit has been good.

PROVISIONS.

There is as active an inquiry as ever for smoked meats and a more active inquiry and larger business than ever in long clear, which just now is the leading product that is handled in round lots. It will be a scarce article before the season is over, it is in few hands and prices grow firm and advance in accordance with these facts. Our basis is still a long way below that at which we could import.

The Best Grocers Make a point of Keeping it always in Stock.

BACON—Long clear is 8¼ to 8¾c. Several cars have change hands at 8c., and one at 8¼c. Bellies are 10½ to 11c., backs 11c., rolls 9c.

HAMS—Are up to 12½ and 13c. for smoked, while a car of pickled changed hands at 11c. The position is very strong.

LARD—Canadian pure is almost literally out of stock. It is 10¼c. in tubs and 10¾c. in pails, while compound is 8½ to 9c.

MESS PORK—Heavy is about out of stock at $15.50, and short cut is scarce at $16.50 to $17.

SALT.

A very good trade is reported, with no variation in quotations. On Tuesday the following sales were made : 2 cars of sacks at 70c., 1 car dairy at $1.25., and 1 car of barrels at $1.20.

DRY GOODS.

The general dulness is not less observable in the dry goods than in the grocery trade. The eyes of all are turned towards the fields just now, from which there are hopes of a very large yield to furnish the power for a big fall and winter trade.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Aug 13, 1891.

Speaking generally there is little business to note here aside from what is doing in sugar. The fact is supplies of most kinds in grocers' hands are small, and although the enquiry is dull at the moment prospects are in every respect favorable. This is shown by the orders on fall account which is in fact the main business with importers just now, and they claim to have satisfactory orders for fall shipment.

SUGAR.

This market is the principal active one in groceries at present, but refiners are getting further ahead with their orders than formerly. Values generally rule firm, granulated moving steadily at 4¾c. while yellows have a free sale at 3⅞c. for good sized lots. There are no raws here to speak of, but the feeling on them is decidedly firm. Advices from New York emphasize this, stating that the refineries there are working full time, and in consequence have to come into the market and pay full prices. Fresh supplies are expected in spot in the course of a couple of days and negotiations in connection therewith are on the basis of 3¾ to 4c.

The refineries claim to be out of syrup, but the demand for it is not brisk, the general basis being 2¾ to 3¼c.

MOLASSES.

Considerable cutting is being indulged in by the French wholesale houses, and this is unsettling the market. Sales as low as 37c., and in some cases below that are reported, while there is no difficulty at all in securing small lots at 38½c.

TEAS.

The tea market has been pretty well cleared of all stock worth from 17 to 20c, and a broker who cabled an order for a good round quantity on the basis of 20c. was answered that the order could not be filled. Lower also are not plentiful, and the demand for them is fair.

COFFEES AND SPICES.

The coffee market is very firm under a good enquiry and light supplies. Very little Rio is to be had here values ruling firm at 20½c. while Jamaica stock is practically exhausted. Cable advices point to continued high prices, and a recent one from London to an importer here stated that Rios had advanced 6d and that the very inside figure was 88s. for 100 bag lots. Spices continue dull with nothing particular to say. Some jobbing sales of Pepper have occured on the basis of 8½ to 10c.

RICE.

There is a fair business doing in this article while values rule shady and unchanged. We quote Patna $4.50 to $5, Choice $4.25 to 4.50, Standard 3.90, and off grades 3.50 in car lots.

DRIED FRUIT.

Business has continued quiet in dried fruit and as a result there are no changes to note. Supplies here in first hands are generally light however, and the market has a firm tone while the conditions point to a good business in the fall. Currants are, if anything the scarcest article, and stocks in first hands are light, while values are correspondingly firm. No prime stock could be moved under 6¼ for jobbing lots and we quote 5⅞ to 6¼. Rasins rule the same at 4 to 4¼c.

GREEN FRUIT.

With large arrivals of new green fruits of a seasonable kind attention is solely devoted to such descriptions. As a result staple lines of green fruits are quiet on the whole, but the hot spell has led to a good movement in lemons. Prices are easy, however, at $3.50 to $5, while oranges are unchanged. Pineapples are offering somewhat higher at 15 to 20c., and bananas are unchanged.

CANNED GOODS.

This market is on the quiet side, but there has been some business in lobsters for round lots at 6½c. Mackerel run from $1.10 to $1.20, and salmon are 10 to 15c. per case higher with orders small. Sardines rule higher under the expectation of a small pack. In fruits and vegetables tomatoes are the chief feature. Contracts have been made as low as 95c. from first hands, but this week the best basis is 97½c. to $1 for round lots from first hands for new pack.

SEASONABLE FRUIT.

Receipts of seasonable fruits to-day were large and the market has ruled generally steady, prices being the same as they were a week ago. Canadian peaches are perhaps the only line which show any change. They have been arriving freely, and the hot weather has not been conducive to good condition. They got out slowly at 50 to 70c. a basket. Arrivals of Southern States and California stock are free but the movement is good. New York State pears range from $5 to $5.50, and Southern peaches sell from $2 to $2.25 per barrel. California pears are at $2.75 to $3.25, peaches $1.75 to $3, and plums $1.75 to $2. Native apples sell at 20 to 40c. per basket, early harvest $2 to $2.25 per barrel.

HOPS.

There is little to report in the way of business about the hop market, and supplies of 1890 on spot, aside from what is in consumers hands, are practically exhausted. In fact we know of only a few small lots for which 20c. is asked but no sales have transpired recently. The fact is all the large brewers have, as we said last week, supplied themselves from New York at the time of the scare and the figures they paid were considerably above present values. With regard to the growing crop reports are contradictory but do not show any material change. On the whole the plants seem to be as well forward as they were last year at this time and some new crops may be expected in the course of a month if not before then. No negotiations in connection with early varieties are mentioned, but we may have some to report before the end of the present month.

PROVISIONS.

The provision trade does not show any particular change from the conditions of a week ago. Values may be repeated :— Canadian short cut, per barrel is quoted at $17.00 to $17.25; mess pork, western, per barrel $15.25 to $15.75; short cut, western, per brl $17.00 to $17.25 ; hams, city cured, per pound 10½ to 11½c. ; hams, canvassed, per lb 0 00 to 0 00c.; lard, Canadian, in pails, 8¾ to 9c.; bacon, per pound, 9 to 10c.; lard, com., refined, per lb, 7¾ to 8c.

EGGS.

It has been an essentially steady egg market that has prevailed since our last report. Supplies have been kept in proper shape by a fair demand and there is no change in values. Caudled stock is moving out well at 13 to 13¼c. sales of 50 case lots being made at the outside, while the range for ordinary grades runs from 12½ to 13c.

BUTTER.

It is simply a repetition of an old threadbare matter to repeal the butter market. Holders are holding July creamery for fancy figure, which it is impossible to realize and the same applies to dairy stock. The sooner they realize that there is a limit to everything the better for the market. It is quite true that some extreme figures have been made, but to think that all stock will make such prices is fallacious. There are always buyers who will pay the price for an article, but such figures are not a criterion. It will be well, therefore, for Smith to think seriously before he refuses a good bid because "Jones up the road" has made a fancy figure. The season is now well advanced and it is worthy of holders' serious consideration whether a large stock of early makes is advisable when the demand always runs, as it invariably does in the fall, to late made stock. The majority of them have had a dear bought experience in this respect, and should accept fair prices now which are at least 3c. better than the figures realized at the same period last vear, which is profit enough for anyone. At the appended quotations report business possible for all goods, but it is a thankless task apparently to find sellers: Creamery 18½ to 19½c, Townships dairy 16 to 18c., Morrisburg and Brockville 16 to 17c, Western dairy 14 to 15c.

CHEESE.

The market opens the week with a harder feeling in response to the firmness shown at the different country boards on Saturday. Stock here is very scarce and holders are correspondingly firm, while there is a decided hunger for cheese and sales have occurred at extreme values. In fact white could not be touched when quality is a consideration under 8¾c., and finest colored is stiff at 8⅞ to 9c. Shippers talk of want of encouragement from the other side, but the course of the market makes it evident that there is a steady call for stock at ruling values. Finest colored 8⅞ to 9c., finest white 8¾ to 8⅞c., fine 8½ to 8⅝c., medium 8⅜c., cable 44s.

GRAIN.

There is only a small local demand for oats, other grains being dull and crop reports have an easy effect on the former, prices being lower. The stocks in store compared with those of a week ago show a decrease of 32,063 bushels of wheat, 300 bushels of corn, 557 bushels of oats, 4.067 bushels of barley, and an increase of 651 bushels of oats, Compared with the corresponding date last year there is an increase of 150,023 bushels of wheat and a decrease of 77,379 bushels of corn, 81,034 bushels of peas 12,517 bushels of oats, 17,243 bushels of barley and 486 bushels of rye. We quote:—No. 2 hard Manitoba, $1.05; to $1.07; No. 3 do., 97c; No. 2 Northern, 96 to 97; feed do., 70c; peas 90c. per 66 pounds in store; 91c. afloat; Manitoba oats; 41c. Upper Canada do., 42c. per 34 pounds; corn, 75 to 80c. duty paid; feed barley, 55c.; good malting do., nominal.

FLOUR AND MEAL

There is little change in the flour market, with only a hand to mouth movement to note. Values, however, generally rule steady, and it is anticipated that there will be heavy consignments across the water from stocks of Manitoba flour at present in store here which may help the market. The stock in store for the past week shows a decrease of 4761 bbls. compared with a week ago, and 4111 bbls. compared with a year ago. Patent spring $5.25 to $5.50 patent winter $4.25 to $5.45; straight roller $4.80 to $4.90; extra $4.50 to $4.60; superfine $4.00 to $4.10; city strong bakers' $5.25 to $0.00; strong bakers' $5,00 to $5.20. Oatmeal standard, per bag $2.85 to $3.00; oatmeal granulated $2.85 to $3 oatmeal, rolled $2.85 to $3.

HALIFAX MARKET QUOTATIONS.

(Wholesale Selling Rates.)

HALIFAX, Aug. 13, 1891.

BREADSTUFFS.—There has been no material change since our last report excepting in the American markets which have advanced. The Canadian millers are trying to make all they can out of their old stock, their stock of old wheat is small, and it will be some time before the new wheat is harvested and fit to use.

Manitoba highest grade patents, $5.75 to 6.00; High grade patents, $5.30 to 5.40; Good.90 per cent Patents, $5.20 to 5.30; Straight grade, $5.00 to 5.10; Superior extras, $4.85 to 5.00; Good seconds, $4.55 to 4.65; Graham flour, $4.90 to 5.10; Oatmeal, $5.65 to $5.75; Oatmeal rolled, $6.00 to $6.15; Rolled wheat, $5.50; Wheat bran per ton, $20 to 21; Middlings $27.50 to 28; Cracked corn, $35; Ground oil cake, $34 to $35; Moulee, $30; Split peas, $4.40 to $4.50; White beans per bushel, $1.80 to 2; Pot barley per barrel, $3.90 to 4.10; Canadian oats, choice quality, 58c. to 60c.; Hay per ton, $11.75 to 13.

SUGAR.—Although the demand for refined sugars is still unsatisfied, refiners throughout Canada are still gaining ground, and it will not be long before they are in a position to render prompt execution of all orders. In the raw article there is no radical change.

Cut loaf, 5½c.; Granulated, 4⅝ to 4¾.; Circle A, 4½c.; White extra C, 4¼c.; Standard, 3⅞c. to 4c.; Extra yellow C, 3¾c.; Yellow C, 3⅝c. to 3¾c.

MOLASSES.—Quotations remain about the same:

Barbados, 40c.; Demerara, 35 to 38c.; Diamond N. 48c.; Porto Rico, 37 to 38c.; Trinidad, 34 to 35c.; Antigua, 38 to 44.

FISH.—There is nothing new to note regarding the local fish trade. New fish continues to come in slowly, but bait, though still scarce, is in a slightly increased supply, so that it is to be expected that more fish will be taken and will soon be brought here.

Hard C. B. $5, ex vessel; Western Shore, $4.50.

ST. JOHN, N. B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN. N.B., Aug. 12, 1891.

We do not notice any material change in our markets since last week. Business shows some improvement, and the prospects are encouraging. There has been a slight advance in sugar, and flour shows signs of stiffening in price. Salt also is higher, while molasses acts very much as if it were on the verge of lower prices.

FLOUR—There is a good steady demand with all jobbers. Prices remain unchanged, but holders do not seem as anxious to sell as they were a few weeks ago. The stocks in certain brands such as Goldie's Star are down, We quote: Manitoba $5.95 to $6.10, High grade family $5.50 to $5.60 Medium patents $5.20 to $5.35.

CORN MEAL—There has been a little improvement in the corn meal market, a good healthy demand and prices firm at $3.30 to $3.40.

OATMEAL—No change to note. Stocks are being gradually reduced, while the prices are about the same as last quoted.

SUGAR—The price of sugar at the refineries has advanced a fraction since our last, and some jobbers are getting the higher price, especially for granulated, which is quoted at $4.65 to $4.75. Yellows are without much change. Our market is well supplied with all grades.

MOLASSES—Only a limited quantity is selling, and that at lower prices than for a few weeks, while the indications are for a further decline. Barbadoes is quoted 36 to 37c.

FISH—Smoked herring have advanced some since last quoted, and sell readily at 12 to 14c. per box. Dry cod, large, are in good demand at $4.40 to $4.50, medium $3.60 to $3.70, pollock $1.60 to $1.75. pickled herring (bay) $1.50 to $1.65 [per half brls.

NOTE.

Some of the retail grocers, who do not approve of the Friday half holiday, are endeavoring to get all to close at 7 o'clock, every evening, except Saturday. They meet to decide, and from what can be learned have been very successful in their canvass.

THE MAN WITH THE BOYS.

"Your Uncle Solomon" in the Grocers' Monthly Review, offers the following advice to "the boys": Be patient and industrious, and, above all things, do not become possessed with the idea that your employer cannot get along without your services. This is a mistake, and oftimes a fatal one, that is made by many who are otherwise good salesmen. None of us know it all, and there are none of us whose services are so valuable but that we could be dispensed with, and upon short notice, too. Did you ever, gentle reader, cast a pebble into the placid waters of a mill stream? If so, then you may have noticed that the pebble at once disappears from sight, without so much as disturbing the smooth surface of the water. A circle or two may be effected, but it is all over almost immediately. Where's your pebble? It is at the bottom of the stream, unnoticed and forgotten. It is out of sight, out of mind here. And so it will be with you when you get to that point where you imagine you are a bigger man than the boss, and that he cannot get along without you. He can get along without you, and with a double quick motion. So, therefore, it behooves you to go slowly and mind your p's and q's.

A successful salesman must necessarily know a good deal, but he does not want to know too much. Such a large fund of knowledge as the latter usually proves fatal, and the disease is very rapid in its progress. Concede that your employer, if only for the sake of making things pleasant, knows more than you do. It is a little thing, but it counts, for it is apt to please your employer and inspire within him a bit of confidence in your discriminating sense and acumen.

Next, obey orders, especially when those orders are mandatory and allow of no discretion on your part. Do as you are told to do; the boss is guiding the canoe, not you. You are only one of the paddles, not even the hull; the boat will float and get along even though one of the paddles runs foul or gets lost. That's you.

The next thing in order is—understand your business well and thoroughly, and talk business during working hours only. Get plenty of sleep, and have lots of fun, but let them come in the following order: sleep, business and then fun.

Don't get drunk, and don't abuse your stomach with mean liquor. If you feel that you must have a drink, take one, but let it be the proper stuff, and take as little as you can. A little liquor goes a long way with the right kind of a salesman. You are better off without it.

Don't treat your customers with the view of making a sale. The man who must be treated in order to get his business is not worth having as a customer. And besides, you are ruining your stomach and destroying your digestion, which is a pretty poor piece of business in itself.

Don't swear. You will find that a good many of your customers or contemplated customers are churchmen, and they do not take kindly to oaths. If you find that you must swear, then wait until you get back to the hotel, and if the steak is bad, you are at liberty to let go at the cook. But it is better not to swear at all. It is just so much steam wasted in a bad cause.

Mind the expense account. The boss foots the bills, of course, and it is awful clever of him to do it, and never say much if anything about it. But then, maybe the boss is thinking, and it is not always a safe investment to bet money on what the boss is thinking about. You are liable to get fooled some day. Better keep down the expense account so that you will always have such a nice boss. The boss will appreciate t.

Never run down your competitor's goods. That's bad business, young man, and it is not going to help the sale of your own merchandise. Praise your own goods, and mind your own business. Stick a pin in this, and make a note of it.

Tell the truth, and tell the liars to go to the D——. But then, they'll get there without your telling them.

Don't oil your hair, and keep your nails clean. These are sure signs of a gentleman

Never boast of how wicked you have been, for you might have a relapse.

Smoke not cigarettes, if you would be known as a man of brains. Young men with brains don't smoke cigarettes.

Don't use cologne. This is bad form, and it often raises a bad smell.

You should not get yourself up too pretty. Somebody might steal you. "Neat, but not gaudy," as the monkey said when he painted his tail sky blue. Blue may be a good color for a cravat, but it would hardly do to decorate a "biled shirt" with. Avoid loud colors, and don't eat onions.

Do not expectorate on the floor and expect your host to wipe it up and call you a gentleman.

If you should be so unfortunate as to have "hocked" your jewelry for the sake of a little loan, don't, in a fit of absent-mindedness, pull out one of these tickets in place of a business card. Such a little thing as this might injure the standing of your house, and tend to bring you your letter of recall.

Don't write to your best girl on the firm's paper. It's apt to get you into trouble.

It is not wise to spoon with too many girls in the same town, particularly if any of your customers have nice daughters who like attention. Business first, boys.

You must not tackle the boss too often for an increase of salary. He might get weary, and you might get fired. It is well to put a high valuation on your services, but be careful and take off a liberal discount when you are talking with the old man. He has a little idea of his own what you are worth, and you do not want to outfigure him any more than you can help.

Deal in facts, but when dealing in figures of the imagination, make it millions; but sell for cash all you can just the same. Cash is always an available asset. Money talks.

Don't quote Scripture at the same time you are selling a man a bill of goods. He may not like it. It is not every man you meet who appreciates your good intentions expressed that way. Better leave the Scripture out during business hours, and you are likely to sell more goods. You can't get a good profit out of a man by filling him up with texts from the Bible. The man will get on to you, young fellow, and he will smite thee and call thee Pharisee.

Monkey not with the band wagon. In other words, avoid ye ballet and ye concert hall, for they are a delusion and a snare. The path that leads their way turns short off from the road that leads to glory and renown.

Lastly, look out for the red-headed girl and the locomotive. There is danger in both.

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER issued weekly, subscription price $2 00 per year.

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

In an address read before the convention of the National Editorial Association, held recently in St. Paul, Minn., Mr. A. Frank Richardson drew the attention of the press and the public to the large business in substitute goods that is carried on by druggists. These traders are accused of using their influence as salesmen to foist upon purchasers unknown or inferior preparations, in lieu of goods that have risen through their own excellence and the enterprise of their proprietors to a commanding place in popular esteem. The demand for such well-known goods is ready-made and is an extensive one. Any cheaper substitute for one of them is sure to put money in the pocket of him who can invent it, and there accordingly plenty of compounders prepared to offer an equivalent for the articles in most common request. Even if there were any originality about those so-called equivalents, it is certain that very few of them would ever be submitted for sale, were it not for the existence of the articles they strive to displace. When a preparation has a world-wide or national name and has fully explored the resources of the demand, then imitators come to put their wares in the avenues opened up by their forerunner. The imitators, having a demand created beforehand, require no enterprise to put their stuff on the market. They must not claim for it any original merit; otherwise they will have to make good their claim. All they do is to say the article is like some other that is in conspicuous demand. They do not presume to be the originators of any volume of demand, they aim to steal what has been originated.

* * * *

This evil is not confined to the drug trade. There are counterfeiters who use the grocery trade for the circulation of their false or inferior wares. Such men do not invent anything that begets demand. They see some proprietary article receiving large attention, they wait till it has established its network of capillaries through the whole consuming body, and then they make something that is just the same according to their representations. They do not pretend that their article has any individuality. If they did it might probably have no rival, but it certainly would have no prototype. That is what such an invention wants. It requires to start under fraudulent auspices, and as it would be a criminal act to forge the brand of the prototype, the thing has to be represented as having the same qualities but not the same name. What merit and extensive advertising have done for the reputable article is sought to be turned to the advantage of the spurious article. The fraudulent brands under which certain domestic pickles were sold here, and to which THE GROCER referred some time ago, illustrate this. Liberal advertising, undoubted worth and long standing had made a certain brand a guarantee of sale nearly anywhere. This brand the domestic pickle makers in question made their model, and under a modified form of it and an untruthful statement upon the label, they sold where they would never have otherwise sold. There are vinegar-bottlers of whom the same fraud has been alleged. And there are many lines that would not have been if the great success of some eminent predecessor had not called them into existence.

* * * *

The trade should be chary about lending itself to the purposes of adventurous imitators. The men who have the faith in their specialty to launch it out in quest of a demand which had never been offered the like before, deserve some protection. When their specialty becomes a staple it is sure to have many imitations clinging to its skirts which should be brushed off before being dragged into prominence. Wherever there is any attempt to float an article upon anything but its intrinsic merits or the enterprise of its promoters, the trade should refuse to be a party to it. The articles that are standard now in their respective spheres did not get into their prominence by virtue of unscrupulous attempts to seize the trade of something they were made after. Their individuality, not their likeness to something else, was what they were pushed upon. It is always a suspicious argument to say that some new thing is like some old one in its usefulness, and is usually a fair test upon which to decide the trader to let the thing alone.

* * * *

It is not always desirable that the trader should be neutral between the claims of two articles for the buyer's favor. The trader has the consideration of relative profit to bias him one way or the other, but he ought to take a broad view of that aspect of the matter, and compare the articles not by units but by the respective volumes sold of each in a year. By that means he will arrive at a true verdict as to which is the more profitable. Sometimes, too, the trader is driven to prefer the unworthier of two articles by the selfishness of the manufacturers or proprietors, who cut profits down too low on the retailer. The natural effect of this works against the proprietors' interests, and it is just that it should.

"TRAVELER" AND WHOLESALIING RETALIERS.

In another column "Traveler" has something to say about the extent of the trade that is carried on directly between wholesalers and consumers, about the causes of it, and about a remedy for it. He agrees with THE GROCER in deprecating the evil, but appears to think that THE GROCER does not go far enough or does not sufficiently grasp the question. His views, however, differ from those expressed in this paper more in degree than in substance, and would probably undergo some amendment under the influence of wider observation.

In the first place, the action of such wholesalers as have sold to consumers does not furnish grounds for a general onslaught upon the wholesale trade. If there are some members of it whose travelers sell to consumers, that fact does not warrant us in saying that a traveler goes out among consumers to look for trade when he finds he can sell nothing to traders. It only warrants us in saying that such is the procedure of certain houses. It appears that there are several of such houses, but those who do no such business not only outcount, but outweigh those who do. An exaggerated idea of the evil is more likely to retard than to accelerate reform, as, if there is a feeling that such practice is common, some who never countenanced it might resort to it, out of a belief that it is necessary in order to hold their own.

As to the cause of the evil, it is unlikely that it originated in the necessity felt by travelers to find a substitute for retailers' custom, and to fill in time that the retail demand offered no occupation for. Travelers as a rule want no such undignified work as that. The cause of the practice lies in the greed and smallness of the principals who are guilty of it. The travelers have no right to be made the scapegoats. And it is not done by houses that have an assured place in the respect of the trade.

"Traveler" fails to find any remedy proposed by correspondents who have written upon this question in its various acute spells during the last several years. Nor do editorials make any suggestions. But he does. He brings forward the original idea that local organizations shall be formed everywhere, and that all shall be leagued together into a national or provincial body. Surely this notion has been made familiar to him by the numerous references that have been made to it from time to time in this paper. Perhaps there would be faults in trade even after such an association would be perfected, and specific evils would still call for specific treatment. The best remedy is the obvious one: Confine your trade to those who will not sell to consumers. It does not need organization to do this. The sum of individual withdrawals will soon sink an erring house into the obscurity it deserves.

WHOLESALE TRANSGRESSORS.

In the Kingston Whig's Yarker correspondence of the 5th inst., wholesale grocers of Kingston and Napanee are accused of doing a large amount of direct trading with consumers. The writer of the paragraph in which that statement is made ventures the opinion that the Wholesale Grocers' Guild must be in a very weak condition. If the thing alleged is a fact, there can be no question about the justice of the comment. The Guild must be weak, if its power to enforce one of its cardinal principles is so far wanting that violation of that principle becomes the rule rather than the exception on the part of an important local division of the Guild. The wholesalers of Kingston have frequently been complained of before as the systematic competitors of their patrons. The Guild closes its doors to all retail grocers, and its accepted definition of what constitutes a retailer leaves no loophole for the admission of any who are not strictly and solely wholesalers. The retribution that is in the hands of retailers themselves generally evens up things in the end. If certain wholesalers ignore the retailers in the distributive system, the retailers can in turn ignore those wholesalers, and the latter will find their tendency to level down into retail rank is irresistible. The trade alone can maintain any large jobbing house. When it has not the support of the trade its largeness must gradually modify and fade away. There were days when the retailing jobber made money, but his jobbing was a stage in his progress towards full wholesale standing, and was not because of decadence from wholesale standing. The present practice is a downhill one, the old one was an uphill one.

It is an open secret that the Guild is becoming more alive to the fact that to certain of its members some of its fundamental laws are a dead letter. The restriction of trade to retailers is not the only one of its objects whose general realization is hindered by the practice of members. There are artful ways of evading regulations, and if artifice is wanting direct violation is not. Instances of tobacco being sold at standard quotations, but with the inducement of freight thrown in, have come under its notice, and though the freight concession is, in defence, alleged to be an authorized act of travellers and a means taken by them to do business entirely at their own expense, there has been a demand made by some members that $500 shall be deposited as a guarantee that every rule of the Guild shall be carried out by every member of it. This is right. It is as much due to retailers as to conscientious wholesalers, that there shall be no infraction of sound business principles that have once been adopted by the general body of wholesalers.

Credit is often too cheap and overbubing far too common. Don't be guilty of the one, and don't abuse the other.

LOBSTER CANNING.

Last year in addition to supplying the home demand, the lobster canning industry in the Dominion exported 8,001,353 lbs. of tinned lobsters, valued at $967,654. Of this quantity the great republic received nearly one-half and Great Britain nearly as much, with Germany and France as much smaller purchasers. It will surprise some readers to learn that official statistics show that this industry gives employment during the season to 28,818 men, women and boys. There are in the Dominion 364 factories, and last year over half a million traps were in use to supply them with lobsters. The lobster fishery on the coast of Maine has been greatly exhausted by the taking of the young and but partly grown shell-fish, and there is too much reason to believe that our own fishery suffer, in the same way, from lax administration and persistent violation of the law. In the meantime the demand has been increasing, and will be further strengthened by the closing of some six British factories on the Newfoundland coast pending the settlement of the French shore question. Prices are reported to be advancing, and the season promises to be a successful one to those engaged in the canning industry.—St. John, N.B., Telegraph.

BARGAINS.

Do bargain sales pay? is a problem with which every merchant has struggled. Profit is a peculiar thing, and some of the most costly errors of a retailer's experience are committed in dealing with this delusive factor. Any move which redounds to the good of the promoter may consistently be declared profitable, although the single transaction may result in actual loss of money. If the loss of five cents entails a profit of ten cents it is manifestly wise to lose the five. Profit is an effect, rather than a mere difference between cost and selling price in separate transactions, and we know of no rule whereby profits may be computed save as a general result. Every merchant knows that he cannot mark all goods upon a basis of 20 or 25 per cent. profit, for not every line will admit of it, while many will yield 50 per cent. Considering, therefore, the bargain sale in its relation to net profits as we have defined that broad term, we must consider the effect of the bargain sale upon general trade in order to determine whether the slight losses incurred result in profit. The store which is continually offering bargains soon becomes very popular, the general opinion of all shoppers being to the effect that the proprietors are very close buyers, and are, beside, content with small profits. People become accustomed to going to the store, finding that aside from special offerings they can purchase all goods as cheap or cheaper than anywhere else. It unquestionably increases the volume of trade largely, and while the percentage may be somewhat lowered the net profits are considerably larger. Any system enabling a merchant to turn stocks quickly admits of a large business on moderate capital. But if the system of bargain sales entailed an actual loss, it is now so firmly fixed in the minds of purchasers that it cannot be done away with.—Ex.

WHOLESALE TRADE WITH CONSUMERS.

August 17, 1891.

To the Editor CANADIAN GROCER.

DEAR SIR,—The communication in last week's GROCER signed "Country Merchants," and your article on the same calls to my mind a rumor I heard while in Toronto some little time back, and which comes more forcibly to the front, as it now seems to be corroborated. The rumor was to the effect that the gentleman named in Country Merchants' letter was starting into the wholesale grocery business for the express purpose of taking up the customers (consumers) who had been dropped by the party whom you style "an old offender." If this is so it accounts for the circulars being distributed among the customers of said old offender. The question of wholesalers supplying consumers is not quite a dead issue, although no really wholesale house will acknowledge the supplying of consumers. It is a noteworthy fact that upon visiting wholesale houses in Toronto you are almost invariably confronted with the sign "Wholesale only" or "The trade only supplied," giving you due warning that the house recognizes the principle laid down by wholesale and retail dealers alike, that the legitimate business of the wholesale grocer is the supplying of the retail trade. There is also another phase to this question. In your issue of April 10th, of the current volume, over the signature of the secretary of the Wholesale Grocers' Guild, is a statement of this very same principle, the rule being laid down by the Guild "That any house selling goods directly to the consumer is a retail house, no matter if, in addition to such trade, it also does some wholesale business."

Now, Sir, this being the rule, it would be interesting to ascertain from the secretary of the Wholesale Grocers' Guild whether Mr. Humphrey is a member of that body or not. If he is, the course is clear. Country merchants need only forward the evidence to the secretary of the Guild, and he will most likely be called down. If he is not a member of the Guild, then the various retail grocers' associations can attend to his case by instructing their members that they have no use for a house which, after selling to the retailer, proceeds to poach upon upon his preserves by supplying his customers. In conclusion, Mr. Editor, I may say that I made enquiries from the secretary of the T.R.G.A. as to the gentleman's membership in that body, as I had heard that he was a member. The secretary, however, informed me that his membership fee was paid up to the end of 1890, but had not been collected for the present year.

WHOLESALERS SELLING TO CONSUMERS.

To the Editor CANADIAN GROCER.

SIR,—I have read many letters in the CANADIAN GROCER from country merchants in regard to wholesalers selling to consumers, and I notice your editorial on the subject in last issue. Now, I fancy if there was but one or two or three or ten wholesale merchants that would or did sell to consumers, it would be an easy matter for the publishers to take them in hand for this breach of trade courtesy; for that is just what it amounts to, and nothing more. But I fancy again that the per cent. of wholesalers who break packages and sell to consumers is greater than those who do not, and as a traveler for a wholesale house put it to me the other day, "they all do it," and just here I will give his reasons for their doing it. He said wholesale men put out their travelers, and they go to a town, canvass the trade, all of whom was getting goods from their particular house, and had no reason to change. Consequently, if the travelers got no orders and having time on their hands, they canvass some of the large consumers, and if they do not get a customer, they take his address for future operations, to mail them circulars and bait them for a nibble, and in time they will bite. There are instances where a wholesale house has filled orders of their travelers' sold to the trade and the consumer at the same time, by the same train. The carter had both on the same truck for delivery. This was in the paint trade. I think that firm has since failed, but it would take too much space of your valuable paper to publish all the proofs that could be furnished of cases where wholesale houses sell to consumers to the injury of the retail trade. But I fancy again what the retailer is most interested in is the remedy. I have failed to see any remedy suggested by any of your writers' and even editorials have been very meagre on that point, and that I may not be accused of not having an "opinion" on the subject I will give one, which is that the whole solution of the question lies in the organization of local Associations throughout the Dominion, under a general head or Grand Association, which shall be representative of all the local associations in the Dominion. Until this is done no successful resistance can be made against the evil in question, as well as many others. It will be asked how are associations to deal successfully with this one issue? I will explain this. A and B are wholesale men. B has the trade in Gravenhurst. A comes along, can't sell any goods to the trade, so he takes two or three consumers' orders at wholesale prices. Then he goes to Orillia where he has a good trade custom and books his orders, and is well satisfied to leave the consumers alone, and so one house follows the other perhaps in the same way, all to the detriment of the retailer. Now if the merchants organized into an association in Gravenhurst and Orillia, and the Gravenhurst association reported to Orillia that A had sold to consumers in Gravenhurst because he had no customers there, A's customers in Orillia would be bound to give him the "cold shoulder," and when he found his operations were reported ahead of him in every town his vocation as a "wholesale man" would be gone. Now these are questions and practices of vital importance to all retailers, and all associations should be formed with these vital issues in view. The black list is as important between towns and cities as between local dealers. There will always be kickers in associations of any kind, but merchants should not allow a kicker on some minor question such as "early closing" and "holidays" break up an organization born for more important issues than that.

Yours,

TRAVELLER.

THE ART OF SELLING.

To the student of human nature probably no greater field to study odd and peculiar characters presents itself than in several departments of a large retail house. A few days spent at one of these houses will bring one in contact with more quaint and curious people than one would encounter in a long journey. The machinery of a salesman's life does not revolve as smoothly as one would suppose, judging by a superficial glance.

It is generally supposed that a salesman's duties consist merely in showing his goods and having them wrapped up. A more mistaken idea could not be imagined; for, if this were all, selling would be a pastime. The successful salesman must be a close observer to enable him to "size up" his customer at a glance and know how to approach him. He must be cool, cautious, determined and possess an almost inexhaustible supply of patience.

In nearly all houses there is a rule that if a salesman fails to effect a sale he must transfer his customer to another salesman. The sales made by these transfers are numerous, proving conclusively one or two things —either the first salesman, through some reason or other, failed to make the proper impression, or the customer was such a peculiar character that the manner and language, combined with the different tactics of the second salesman, happened to catch his fancy. No one without the personal experience can realize the tremendous strain and tax to which a salesman's patience is subjected. He must be prepared to meet all sorts of statements and arguments and be able to disprove them promptly and in a genial manner. Under no circumstances must he lose his temper; if he does he is lost, no matter how much time and labor he has spent or mental worry he has suffered.—Am. Storekeeper.

A STUDY IN DETAILS.

Little did we expect or dream to find on the frontier a demonstration of the theory often advanced and advocated in the American Grocer, that it was practicable and of value to so systematize the workings of a retail store as to bring clearly and constantly to view all of the details of the business. We feel assured that our grocers will be glad of an account of the workings of an Arizona general store doing a trade in miscellaneous merchandize of $160,000 per annum, and yet so perfect is the system that the owners know exactly the relation which every article in the stock bears to the total business. The details are simple and cannot be considered as adding to the expenses of management, but rather as contributing to increased profits and perfection of service.

First—There is a very thorough system regarding the receipt of goods. It is a rule to request shippers of goods to note on invoices, weights, classification and rates of freight. Whether this is done or not every invoice of merchandise when received is thoroughly examined, all of the goods weighed, the date of their receipt noted upon the packages, and examination made as to whether the classification is correct and the rate of freight is right or not. It has been found by experience that errors are very numerous in this direction and a very large saving is effected by this thorough inspection of goods purchased and received. Every article in stock is marked so that there will be no blunders or errors in the sale of goods. There is also a system of "Want" books, upon which the clerks are requested to note goods which are likely to be needed within a short time.

At this distant point, Flagstaff, Arizona, freights are so high that the cost adds an average of 30 per cent. to the invoice price of the goods, and yet we find that many articles, particularly those purchased on the Pacific coast, are retailed quite as cheaply as in the larger cities of the East.

The stock is varied and includes all the general lines of groceries, dry goods, boots and shoes, hardware, crockery, glassware, drugs, Yankee notions, Indian supplies, such as are needed by the traders and the Indians direct.

In the department of dry goods an interesting feature is the receipt and sale of Bayeta cloth, brilliant red in color, manufactured and dyed in Spain, and which is purchased almost exclusively by the Indians, who unravel it and use it in manufacturing blankets, etc.

We find in the line of food, table delicacies such as are usually found only in first-class city stores, such as goods put up by Alexis Godillot, Jr., Richardson & Robbins, Gordon & Dilworth, and other first class preservers. We were quite surprised to find, for instance, Philippe & Canaud's sardines, the finest brands of olive oil and the choicer imported delicacies.

There is a very large business done with the Indians, who bring in their blankets, baskets, etc., and exchange for supplies. This gives this store a stock of Indian blankets and curios for which a ready market is found in Texas, New Mexico, California and other points. Eastern people are not apt to appreciate the value, for instance, of Navajo blankets, which run in price from $2 or $4 to some for which $125 have been refused.

Second—In this store an account is kept so thoroughly with each of 1,170 lines, which represent from 1,500 to 3,000 articles in stock, that at a glance the sales of every article for each day, month and year, whether it be of axle grease, emery paper, barley, sugar, flour, or any other article in infrequent or constant request. Let us follow the plan as it covers the grocery department, and we shall have an illustration of how every other department is kept. A record is made of every sale, whether for cash or credit, this being obligatory in any retail business, especially as regards a record of every credit sale. In this Arizona store the salesman uses a blank, the head of which serves for a stub, it being separated from the main part of the blank by a perforation ; this blank is as shown :

RIORDAN MERCANTILE CO.

Salesman.....Date.....Amt.....
Sold to.....No.....
....

RIORDAN MERCANTILE CO. No.....

Salesman.... ...Terms.....Date.....
Sold to.....Shipped by.....

The blanks of each day are used for making bills for each purchaser ; which bills are copied by a letter press in a large invoice or copying book. These blanks are filed while the posting is made directly to the ledger from the invoice book. The originals are preserved, after being carefully checked. These blanks are then passed to a young woman, who goes over every item and posts the sales of each article on sheets, each sheet representing one article. These sheets are arranged alphabetically so that familiarity with them enables the clerk to refer to the account of every article with dispatch. On the reverse side of the sheet the different purchases of each article are noted. Thus we have on one sheet a complete record which shows at a glance the daily sales of every item, and also the sales to date from the beginning of each month and from the commencement of each year. The total sales of each article for the month is posted to a miniature ledger or sheet on which is an account of each article, each sheet affording space for half a dozen or more articles. At the top of each account is noted the total sales and receipts of that article for the preceding year and the average per month, and also the value of the stock on hand as shown by the inventory at the commencement of the year. The purchases are also entered and the sales for each month, for the quarter and year, in a form like the following :

Name of article.
Sales during previous year.
Average per month.
Amount on hand at inventory.

RECEIPTS.

January.
February.
March.
Total receipts first quarter.
April.
May.
June.
Total receipts second quarter.
July.
August.
September.
Total receipts third quarter.
October.
November.
December.
Total receipts fourth quarter.
Total of inventory receipts.

SALES.

Total sales first quarter.

Total sales second quarter.
July.
August.
September.
Total sales third quarter.
October.

Total sales fourth quarter.

Balance as per inventory.

The system used checks itself, for the total of the blanks must agree with the total of the invoice book, and these in turn with the total of the sales of each article. These tests are made daily or weekly and any errors promptly noted and hunted out.

This system furnishes a complete guide in purchasing goods and for the adjustment and averaging of profits. Before adopted it was found that the tendency was to overstock, there being on hand at the last stock-taking, nearly 500 articles valued at $6,000, and for which there was a very small demand, and yet it was necessary to keep some of them in stock, for instance, the sale of emery paper was only $2 or $3 per month, and yet it had to be kept ; but it often happened that purchases were made of too large a quantity and thus a supply was secured that would last for several years, when there was no necessity of purchasing beyond the requirements of two or three months. It will readily be seen that this system affords a complete check upon any such transactions. The aggregate of over-purchases makes a serious expense account for any store, subjects goods to deterioration, and which must be sold at a sacrifice, to say nothing of the extra labor which an overstock involves.

An analysis is also made of the sales or the character of each day's business. The owners of the store are interested in a large lumber industry, and a railway and thus it happens that goods are bought to be used in these enterprises, as well as for the use of men in the logging camp. A statement is prepared each day showing the nature of the sales. This is kept upon a blank 8½ x 11 inches, ruled in fourteen double columns, bearing these headings: Manufacturing Plant; Working Appliances and Departments; Real Estate and Buildings; Lumber Expenses; Income Expenses; Contingent Income; Contractors; Employees, all of which refer to the Lumber Company. These subdivisions are followed by a column headed: Total A. L. & T. Co., wherein the total purchases of the day of these various interests are footed. Then comes columns headed: Merchandise Expenses; Store Employees; Merchandise Credits; Merchandise Debits; Grand Total. Here at a glance the manager of the store can tell the amount of sales each day, whether to men in the logging camp, or their contractors, store employees or other class of buyers.

A like system is carried on in large hotels, by railway companies and other corporations employing many men. If such institutions can master details and do it in a thorough manner, it is certain a retail grocer, dealing in food products only, can keep a complete record of his business. How many keep an account with the goods that go out of their store? Are the various articles taken for store use charged to store expenses; the brooms used for sweeping, the oil in lighting, the brushes kept for dusting, etc.? If there is no account kept with all these items, there can be no thorough knowledge of the business.

The system adopted in Arizona does not add materially to the expense account. In this case one woman occupies about one-half of her time in this special work. The system makes the proprietor master of details, and therefore a master of his business. We are pleased to find this illustration of a theory often advocated, and which we have never seen in practice except in the case of a large Broadway jewelry store, which keeps an account with every item in the stock. We are pleased to note this practical demonstration of the theory advocated and especially as it relates to a general country store, which is probably the severest test to which it could be applied.

With such examples before us, is there any excuse for grocers not mastering the details of their business and thus guarding themselves against contingencies which, if not provided for, are sure to lead to bankruptcy?—American Grocer.

FARMERS' SUPPLY PURCHASING IDEA.

It is not, as many seem to suppose, an entirely new scheme, says an exchange, the proposition for a greater degree of co-operation among farmers. For instance it is claimed that they might effect a large saving by purchasing and owning agricultural implements and farm machinery in common, and the advocates of this plan, among which is found the Chicago Tribune, urged the present opportunity for farmers to study up the benefits of co-operation through their granges and alliances and to put in practice this system of joint ownership of farming tools.

The singular feature of this proposition is that it should be hailed as in any sense a new one. It has been tried among farmers in various parts of the West several times, and nearly always with ill success. There is a gentleman in St. Louis, still engaged in handling farm machinery, who supplied such merchandize to a number of farmers associated together in the purchase and ownership of working implements, some years ago, and the experience was mutually satisfactory. Aside from the trouble over collecting for the goods which the salemen experienced farmers themselves indulged in more controversy over the use of the implements than the ownership and keeping up of a joint fence would ordinarily occasion. If Farmer A wanted the mower, Farmer B was either useing it or it was down in the farthest corner of Farmer C's lot, ten chances to one it being also out of repair. If Farmer C wanted the reaper jointly owned between them, Farmer B was almost certain to have broken a cog wheel in it while using it the day before. With a surpulus of owners, there was a deficit of room in which to store the machinery when not in use and it soon went to rack and ruin. But not until the families of the numerous owners had shared in the controversies arising over the implements and the whole neighborhood was torn up into fractions. It was like the historical case of farmer Horace Greely who owned a prize bull, but had accommodatingly loaned it to a neighbor, who had permitted it to dissappear and so the use of the animal Uncle Horace never could have.

Co-operation is one thing and community is another. There have been farmers, as others, who lived in association with property common to all, as, for instance, the Oneida community. They jointly carried on agricultural pursuits, and with more than ordinary success, but their fellowship was something entirely different from the mere voluntary association of farmers, not bound by ties of consanguinity or religious sect or craft. The Shakers form an agricultural community, and own property in common, and they have been successful. But their body has a stronger tie than a mere economic alliance of farmers to endeavor to purchase goods cheaply by purchasing jointly. So it may be said that while in exceptional instances under strong fraternal ties or bonds, a community of zealots may be a success, co-operation is a far different matter, so far as the farmer is concerned, and may prove as delusive in general practice, if attempted, as have been the few instances of neighborhood co-operation and the like attempted some years ago under Grange auspices. Anyway co-operation is not new, neither is community. But they are not alike, and it is astonishing that the papers now discussing the question should confound the two. They have nothing in common unless it be that the joint ownership of some property is the desire or theory of one, while the common ownership of all property is the essential tenet of the other.

CLEANLINESS PAYS.

Dirty shops abound everywhere. It is not unusual to see the proprietor or assistants reading a newspaper or standing in the door when customers are few, while plenty of work could be found within. Dirty windows and counters, scraps of meat lying about, bits of paper and twine on the floor, rusty hooks, tarnished brass-work of scales, gas-fittings, etc., indicate the Paddy-go-Easy trader whose creditors will in time suffer for his laziness. Even if a shop is small and the stock meagre the best possible appearance should be put on everything. A neat, carefully-kept place attracts custom. The public appreciate cleanliness where articles of food are handled, and shun the antiquated establishments which are content to jog along in a style that might suit half-a-century back. Dirt, in the past, was considdred a token of stability. Shopkeepers looked upon the dust and cobwebs of years as a soldier would upon a torn and bullet-riddled flag—as something to be proud of; and, evidently, this race is not extinct. Cleanliness pays, and the grocer or provision merchant who is not careful on this point runs the risk of having neither shop nor business to attend to ere he awakens to the importance of adopting modern business methods.—Irish Provision Merchant and Grocery Record.

Burglars visited Teeswater on the night of the 11th inst. The safe in the store of W. H. Carter, general merchant, was blown open and $77 stolen. The safe was drilled from the top, and the explosive blew the door completely off, scattering the books and papers on the floor. There was a cold chamber in the safe, but this the rascals did not meddle with. It is supposed that glycerine was the explosive used. The burglars also visited the post office, entering through the front door. They captured $1 in specie and opened one registered letter, taking the contents cosisting of three negotiable cheques drawn by J. K. McLean, the chairman of the License Commissioners, in favor of Mr. Hewart, the license inspector, on the Bank of Commerce, Walkerton.

BENEFITS OF ASSOCIATION.

"A pleasant answer turneth away wrath, but a pleasant grocer wins trade. Could one have photographed the hearts of the grocers of Minneapolis fourteen months ago you would have found them full of disappointment, discouraged and many almost ready to give up. To-day, could we take another impression, we would find him full of hope and energy. The reason for this is, he is getting his rights, which an unrestricted competition had before deprived him of. He has been doing right by his fellow-men, and is growing to believe that the future is bright, and he hopes by dint of energy and fair dealing some time in the near future to be in a position where he can relieve himself of the great strain of body and mind he has been under in consequence of this relentless competition. To say that I am glad to meet so many of you here to-night but feebly expresses my sentiment. You have not come here groping in the dark as you did formerly, knowing that something ought to be done, and with a sort of blind faith that the way to do it would be discovered. One year ago last month what did we find? We found about 350 grocerymen pulling 350 different ways. You were working like heroes from morning to night, week in and week out, without any visible signs of gain, but hoping that by your industry and sacrificing your whole time and comfort to the business, that you might succeed. Energy such as grocerymen possess will conquer anything on earth that can be conquered with good management your efforts will be fruitless. Harmony is the basis of your actions, your business is one of the most exacting. You cannot give a $15 service for $14 and make money. There is nothing that will bring success like co-operation. We have had a little of that in the past year, and I want to ask you if there is a man in this hall to-night that wants to go back to the old way. In the past year you have raised the value of every grocery stock in the city, you have raised yourself in the estimation of each other as gentlemen, and to-day are in shape to carry out any needed reform. There are plenty of errors in the grocery business yet to be corrected, and we trust that each of you will assist heartily in supporting every movement that may be made in the future in that direction. Let your aim be to take good care of the confidence reposed in you by your customers : when they leave an open order with you see that it is filled conscientiously with the best you have, remembering that you are catering to the palate, and if you please that your success is assured. Away with the idea of cheapness; encourage those that you buy goods of to handle the best goods, by buying the best goods of them, and strive to lead your customers to know the truth, that quality not quantity is the best for them. Low grade goods are always used as leaders, and while they may in some instances yield you a tempory profit, it is a questionable one, as you cannot compute the injury to your reputation in handling such goods, while fine goods are satisfactory and make a walking advertiser of each of your customers."

The reference to the wisdom of handling good goods is especially deserving of the attention of retail grocers, whether members of an association or not, because the temptation to introduce inferior articles for the sake of a higher profit is always present and often very hard to resist when competitors succumb to it and succeed in enticing away one's customers, who, however, generally quickly return after a single trial of the cheaper goods.—Northwest Trade.

THE INCH AND THE OUNCE.

Apropos to the discussion of a system of new weights and measures, some few points in relation to the derivation of the old standards of measurement might not be out of place. As the Jews had a mystical reverence for seven, the ancient Welsh and Celts for three, and the Greeks a perfect philosophy constructed out of the harmonies of all sorts of numbers, so the Romans fell back upon a scale of—or, more properly, upon a scale with—a base of six. According, as they divided the pound into twelve unciæ, so they also divided the foot, which was the standard of lineal measure, into twelve sections, and they called these sections ounciæ, too. But how did they get the inch originally? Rather how did they get at the pound? For that, and not the inch, is the unit. There seems to be no precise information. They would divide any unit into twelfths, and a prevailing notion was at one time that the linear uncia was really the original, and was then transferred as a name to a weight. This, though plausible, is hardly the case. Sometimes, especially in old books written when philology was not what it is now, it was the fashion to derive the unciæ from the same word in the Greek, because after the revival of letters in Europe the admiration of the Greek became so great that whenever similar words were found in it and some other language, it was always said that the other language borrowed them from the Greek. This is very far from being always so, and in the present instance the very reverse appears to have occurred. The ounce is literally the 12th, and thus we see at once the sense of speaking of an ounce of land and an inch of milk, just as of an inch of a man's will or an inch of interest for money on loan. It was always the 12th of a unit ; 12th of an hour ; 12th of a jugerum, that half acre which the two oxen ploughed in a day ; 12th of a sextarius, or equivalent to our pint ; 12th of the entire hereditis ; 12th of the principal lent or hire, when it was money, as usury, that is, over six per cent. It is accordingly as much of a mistake to say that the primary meaning of the word is linear, which is to say that it comes straight from the Greek into the Latin, and thence on to us. The riddle is plain enough when we get to the true origin of the word—a 12th. Once, indeed, it used to be said that the true origin was that the word meant a thumb-breadth, because its equivalent, pollex, in linear measure, was often used in its place. But this is not the case. Some of the old Latins themselves, moreover, thought it meant literally the unit ; but even this will not hold beside the proper signification of the 12th. The pound weight was really never divided by inches or ounces ; it was divided by 12ths, by halves, by thirds, by fourths, and by sixths. And here, again, we see what a convenient base a system of 12ths is for division compared with a system of 10ths, which could only be divided in two ways—by two and five. For seven ounces they use the literal seven-twelths ; for eight ounces they said two parts, that is, two-thirds ; for nine, wanting a fourth, which with us reads like a roundabout way of expressing three-quarters ; for ten, wanting a sixth ; for eleven, a 12th. It will thus be seen that ounce is derived from the Latin uncia, which is put for unica, that is, one part of any whole ; and hence an ounce—an inch ; which are different forms and applications of the same word.—Northern Counties Grocers' Review.

ADVETTISING AS AN ART.

Advertising, as an art that is passing through its several stages of development, only needs to be undertaken with intelligence and carried on with courage all the way through. Beyond this, there is no more mystery about it than there is about many other evolutions of our marvellous modern life.

It is true that some people regard it as they do a lottery, but continued experience soon instructs them that the luck is always on their side. When it is found profitable to advertise certain lines of trade, and not a few callings to the extent of fully two-thirds of the capital invested, the case is taken out of the court of discussion and decided to be settled for good and all.

If it can be shown, as it can be, over and over again, that intelligent and resolute advertising will fully warrant such an outlay, then it must be allowed that advertising, as one of the life-giving elements of business, has gone beyond the experimental stage altogether.

The sole and only secret of its operation is that it shall be continuous and systematic; and by system we mean a deliberate and comprehensive plan of operation to start with, and the sagacious selection of the most effective agencies to carry it out. If even haphazard advertising work yields such surprising results to the impulsine experimenter, there can be no mistake in entering upon it after becoming familiar with its reliable rules and understanding its unvariable conditions.

Once having mastered these, the advertiser may securely conclude that his coveted fortune is wholly in his own hands. He may safely repose in the strengthening thought that he is henceforth the master of the situation and the architect of his future. He has but to maintain his supply of resources at their highest standard, and steady and unflinching advertising will take care of the rest.—Weekly Journalist, Boston.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

John Goodmurphy of Gore Bay, undertook to make a dazzling flank movement on his creditors a few days ago. John ran a general store at the above named place, and for two years had been carried by his compassionate creditors. He had a lot of lumber he was waiting for an opportunity to dispose of, and his creditors kindly bided the time along with him. But a short time ago a buyer turned up, John expeditiously transferred the lumber to him and pocketed $3,300 for it. He then repaired to this city, where he made the following proposal to the house that was his leading creditor: He would deliver up the $3,300 and would give his own notes for $1,500 more, to be paid in three equal instalments, coming due in ten, twenty and thirty months. This was to liquidate a total indebtedness of $9,000, divided among several creditors. The offer was thus equivalent to about 50c. on the dollar. His proposal was submitted to a meeting of the creditors, and before that meeting he held to his position. The advantage he clearly believed to be on his side, but he was unaware that a detective was shadowing him all the time. He had brazenly acknowledged that the $3,300 was in his pocket, and that he recognized the legal powerlessness of his creditors to get it out. Besides the $3,300 of cash, he had the following assets: Stock $2,500, real estate $3,100, book debts $600, or a total of $9,500. The answer made by his creditors was like unto his proposal: it was of the nature of a bluff. He was told that he had to deliver over the cash. That they would make him pay. He was promised that he would be reasonably dealt with. An important advantage in the hands of his creditors was a power of attorney possessed by one of them, which had been conceded two years ago when Goodmurphy needed an extension. This put it in the power of that creditor to assign all Goodmurphy's belongings, and that step would have been taken if the debtor had not yielded to the terms of the creditors. These were, that he surrender the $3,300 and sign three notes for $833⅓ each, to be due at the intervals named in his proposal. Thus $1000 more was got one of him, and he was let go. He will return to business, though his idea was to depart if he could not get his offer accepted.

The creditors had either to lose a little or be a party to this man's resuming business. It is a pity they had not any legal means of attaching the debtor's money when he is capable of making so shameless an avowal of intention to defraud. If his creditors had rejected his overtures, or had refused to treat with him, they could not have got a hold of the cash. They could not force him to assign it, and they felt no doubt that they had to be content with the best they could do and get the cash. But they ought not to assist such a man back into business with a capital of $4,000, which was all their due. They thus bestow a bonus upon a man who openly declared he was not honest, and he will be the opponent of honest men. His brother-in-law, Alexander Hall, from the same place got away two years ago with a lot of his creditors' money.

AN EXPENSIVE ASSIGNMENT.

Some ten or twelve days ago, Wm. K. Fisher, a Bathurst St. grocer, assigned. The business was continued six days by the assignee after the property had been put in his charge. At the end of that time the creditors authorized their colleague who had the largest interest in the estate to take it over and pay the professional assignee whatever reasonable charges he had against it. He put in a bill of some $67, of which $5 a day for his services was one of the most picturesque items. First, out of the $270 was the landlord's bill for $50. Since the assignee's bill came in he has sent another for the six intervening days at $5 a day, and notifies the creditors that that shall be the rate until he is paid. Thus are the assets being gradually eaten up by the asssignee. Of course there is redress if the charges are excessive. The charges can be regulated by the county judge, but where are the resources to pay the expenses of the judge s intervention? The estate is too small to afford them, and the creditors are at the mercy of the assignee.

The insolvent had evidently been advised to go to a professional assignee. He did so. He could easily have chosen one who would have settled his affairs at less cost to his creditors, or if he could not, he could have had it done by his principal creditor much more economically. Economy ought to be considered by all traders who are about to assign. Whatever is left of their estate is the property of their creditors, and men who are accustomed to stand often between creditors and suspended traders do not make unreasonable charges.

A WHISKEY "AD." RESTRAINED.

The interposing hand of a job printer brought about a rather comical contretemps the other day. Mr. J. W. Lang gave orders to a local printing firm to get him up a neat blotting pad of several pages, wherein to advertise a Scotch whiskey for which he is agent here. He wished the printer to have some suitable cut designed for the pad The tablet was got up and bore the impression of a Highlander in the national guise. The pads were distributed in large numbers. The other day a man called upon Mr. Lang and asked him to circulate no more, as the cut was his property. He had sent it to the printing house in question to be used in a certain piece of work, and it had been put into Mr. Lang's service without the consent of the owner. The owner objected, not because any injury had been done to him through the use of the cut by another, but because he would not permit anything of his to be applied to furthering the sale of whiskey. He is a very strong temperance man.

The merchants of Oswego, Ont., have formed a protective association.

Mr. Wm. Fretts has opened a grocery store on West Dundas street, Deseronto, Ont.

Donald Somerville, Odessa, Ont., has sold out his stock of groceries to J. A. Pomeroy, of Marlbank.

Ex-Mayor M. A. MacLean, of Vancouver, has begun business in that city as a commission merchant.

Mr. John Templeton, is about to open a fine grocery store, on the corner of Bell and Emily streets, Ottawa.

John McMillan has entered into partnership with D. J. Jamieson general storekeeper, Vankleek Hill, Ont., and they are busy taking stock.

M. J. F. Morish, successor to Equi the Yonge St. grocer, is now away on his wedding trip, having been married a few days ago to Miss Farewell.

Mr. J. G. Stacy Frankville, Ont., is selling out his stock of goods, previous to his removal to Manitoba whither he goes on account of his health.

D. Cantelon, the well known apple buyer, is credited with the estimate that there will be 20,000 barrels of apples shipped from Bruce county this fall.

Mr. Robert Shaw, of the well-known grocery firm of Shaw Bros., Cornwall, Ont., is now in Kingston, where he will spend a couple of weeks holidays.

Messrs. C. F. and W. G. Richards have rented the store at present occupied by Mr. J. G. Tracey Frankville, Ont., and will open shortly with a general stock of merchandise.

William Wilson, the wealthy and highly respected general store keeper of Cumberland, Ont., died last week aged 76 years. His eldest son George succeeds his late father's extensive business.

Large quantities of barrels daily come in by trains from the Napanee Cement Works, at Napanee Mills, for shipment to Prince Edward county. About seven thousand are stored in the dock warehouse.

Mr. George Hadrill, the secretary of the Montreal Board of Trade, was married in London, England, on Tuesday, August 11, to Miss. Emeline Copeland, second daughter of Mr. Albert E. Copeland, of Belleford Chelmsford, Eng.

Messrs. Cameron & McDonald, Cornwall, Ont., have a pair of huge cats, that besides destroying mice, rats, and such small quadrupeds, keep the store clear of dogs. The moment a strange canine makes his appearance, inside the shop, he is the object of their combined attack, and the dog generully comes out second best.

The grocers' of the North end St. John, N. B., at a meeting, the other night, passed a resolution, unanimously, to close their stores every evening, at 7 o'clock, excepting Saturday evenings, those of Christmas week and evening before holidays.

The store of James Higgins on Front st., Sarnia, was broken into the other night and plundered to the extent of $50. Charles Higgins, brother of the owner, was arrested in Port Huron next day on suspicion. He will not submit to be taken back to Sarnia, and consequently until extradition papers are got ready will remain in custody of the Sheriff.

A few days ago Messrs. A. Meighen & Bros. made a shipment of cheese from the Riverside (Perth) factory to Yokohama, Japan, and Hong Kong and Shanghai, China. This is the second shipment made from the Perth factory. This lot was specially made to fill an order for the Japan and Chinese market and consisted of 300 cheeses, and it is expected will lead to further orders from Eastern Asia.

Mr. Arthur P. Tippet, was in Toronto, en route to Winnipeg, on Friday last, in the interest of the firms represented by his house. His office, in this city, is at 1 Wellington st. east, and in charge of Mr. Joseph H. Tippet. Mr. Tippet reports business in all lines, represented by his firm as good, notwithstanding that general trade has been below the average. The high class of goods they sell no doubt accounts for this.

The Gommercial Travelers' Circle of the Hamilton Y.M.C.A. had a pleasant outing on Saturday, at Grimsby Park. While some listened to a lecture from Rev. Mr. Wills on Evolution, others engaged in a baseball match between the Toronto and Hamilton travelers, which the former won by three runs. At 5 o'clock they assembled in the Temple, where R. M Stuart took the chair, and a programme of songs and five-minute addresses was entered on. The songs were furnished by J. C. Taylor, W. W. Main and Miss Lowes, and the addresses by J. R. Cox, H. W. Matthews, G. W. Armstrong, G. A. Black, G. Coleman, J. R. Webb, Thomas Gain, Noah Phelps and J. Madill. A pleasant time was spent.

While all are entitled to credit who contributed to make the Canadian display a grand success at the recent Jamaica Exhibition, we may specially mention the exhibit of the enterprising firm of F. F. Dalley & Co., which was large and tastefully arranged. For their Spanish Blacking, Elm City Harness Soap and Oils, they received, besides a certificate of honor, the gold medal, which is the highest award possible. They were also successful in carrying off a certificate of honor for their specialties, consisting of Herst's Pain Exterminator, Dalley's Family Salve, Dalley's Cholera Mixture, May Apple Blood Syrup, Dalley's Eye Salve, Horehound and Elecampane, and their celebrated Silver Cream Baking Powder. Referring to their exhibit as a whole, Mr. Adam Brown, the Commissioner, says, that it was most creditable and a chief feature of the exhibition, and feels satisfied that through it they have laid the foundation of a large and profitable trade with the West Indies.

LICORICE PRODUCTION AND TRADE.

The British Consul at Bussorah, in an interesting report on the growth of the liquorice plant on the banks of the Tigris and Euphrates, says that these great rivers in the part where the root is found flow through flat, treeless praries of uncultivated and nearly uninhabited land, For three months of the year hot winds blow, and the temperature reaches 104 degrees. For six months the climate is moderate and salubrious, and for three months bleak and wintery, the thermometer going down to 30 degrees at night. The liquorice plant is a small shrub, with light foliage, growing to about three feet high, where its root can reach the water. It grows without any cultivation. No lands are leased for the purpose, and no objection is made to its being collected. It is found in abundance from Ctesiphon, ten miles from Bagdad, down to Kut-ul-Anara, half-way between Bussorah and Bagdad. It grows on red-earth soil, and also on light, almost sandy soil, where the wood is best, provided it has plenty of water, and the ground is not more than fifty yards from the actual river or stream. Only one firm works it in Bagdad, and it is well known that the business is a prosperous one. The wood, after being once dug up and cut, grows again better afterwards. The time of collecting is, generally speaking, during the winter, but it is possible all the year round. The root when dug is full of water, and must be allowed to dry, a process which takes the best part of a year, especially in hot weather. It is then sawn or cut into small pieces six inches to a foot long. The good and sound pieces are kept, and the rotten ones are used for firewood. It is then shipped in native river boats to Bussorah, whence it is shipped in pressed bales to London, and again from there to America, where it is used largely in the manufacture of tobacco. The Consul thinks the trade is capable of expansion. The demand in America is great, and shipments are easily disposed of. After sorting there still remains some useless wood in the bales, perhaps 7 per cent. From figures supplied by the Bagdad firm engaged in the business, it seems that the total net cost of a ton of liquorice root laid down in London is about £4.

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, August 20, 1891.

GROCERIES.

The market records of the last three weeks might almost all be struck from one copy. The respects in which they differ are minor and unessential. The outlines of the situation reappear as if they were set and could not farther be modified. The dulness with which the month opened deepens as it advances, and now Diogenes and his lantern in quest of an honest man is nothing to the reporter and his notebook in quest of something new on the market. The season is like the lull between the going out and coming in of the tide, like the eleven minutes of equilibrium when there is no movement either way. The fall prospects have, however, a very roseate hue. Crops continue on their way to the granary without mishap of frost or wet weather, and a liberal yield appears to be a certainty all over the country. Payments are prompt, the largest being of course for sugar.

CANNED GOODS.

All the canners have peas upon the market now. The selling price is steady at $1.12½. Retailers' orders are fairley numerous, but probably not more so than before the pack became an element in the situation that could be weighed and measured. Corn and tomatoes for fall delivery are attracting some attention, and have perhaps increased rather than otherwise in market interest. The price is unchanged at $1.05 to $1.10, with the latter figure for the best brands. What is in store for the salmon market is not yet known. Coast reports are not materially different in their tenor now from what they were a week ago. All Horseshoe pack that the proprietors will so far undertake to furnish on this market has been contracted for by local jobbers, and the same remarks may by made of some other brands. Notwithstanding this jobbers are rather reticent with quotations. One or two houses talk of $1.40 to $1.45, but most of them prefer to look upon stock as still a bird in the bush, and not to be calculated on with certainty. Moreover, there is not likely to be anything lost by waiting, if the estimates of the shortage be true. Spot salmon is in very active demand at $1. 55 to $1.60. Spot tomatoes are almost an abstraction. A very few cases comprise the resources of the market. It requires $1.55 to $1.60 to buy any. The canners are offering fruits now, strawberries and raspberries for immediate, and plums and pears for future delivery, at from 5 to 10c. below last year's opening prices on account of the difference in the cost of sugar. Another advance in Albert sardines is looked for. There has been scarcely any fishing in France.

COFFEE.

An average week's trade has been transacted without any effect upon prices, which are fairly firm at unchanged quotations. Fine grades are rather scarce, but the staple qualities are plentiful.

DRIED FRUIT.

The quantity of Valencia raisins sold this year is very much larger than the average. Probably twice as many off stalks have been handled as were handled a year ago. The low prices that have ruled since spring were the cause of this. These prices are as low as ever, the range of quotations being from 4 to 6½c. The output of stock keeps up, and the new crop supplies will have less to cope with in the way of a surplus from the crop of '90 .than appeared probable some time ago. Advices from Patras upon the subject of the new crop currants say that shipments will begin about 15th or 18th of the present month. The weather has been exceedingly favorable and the quality of the fruit exceptionally fine. Trade in spot currants is moderately active at firm prices. The market for Sultanas has opened with prices somewhat easier than usual, and the probability that prices will rule low throughout the active trading season appears warranted by the outlook.

NUTS.

A light demand is all that continues to be felt. It is quite equal, if it keeps up, to the task of taking all the stock off the market before supplies are in.

RICE AND SPICES.

Japan rice is slow to arrive. There is not a bag now in stock here. The direct shipment reported a fortnight ago went out with remarkable celerity. Ordinary grades are selling well at long standing prices. In spices there will be no special activity until fall pickling and kindred household processes begin. There is no change in prices now.

SUGAR.

A very good demand for granulated is about all that remains of the big sugar flurry. Fruit operations are still going on but are far at their ebb now, and activity will not revive till peaches, pears, plums, etc., are ready. Granulated quotes yet at 5c. in quantities of 15 barrels and over, and at 5⅛c. in smaller quantities. Yellow sugar is easier as a consequence of large stocks and lack of demand, both granulated and raws this year encroaching upon the part of the demand which was formerly the province of yellow. There is a small quantity of a very dark yellow selling at 3¾c. but the next grade above this quotes at 3⅞c. Raw sugars are plentiful. Trinidad is 3.60c., Barbados 3⅞c. Demeraras 4⅜ to 4½c.

Willet and Gray, in their last weekly statistical report, say :

The demand through the week has been good, resulting in an advance of 1-16c. per lb. at which the market remains quiet and firm, but with little disposition to do business either by buyers or sellers. The European markets have been steady through the week, and the quotations for beet sugars remains unchanged. Raws — An effort has been made this week to recover the ground lost during the preceding week. Competition came to an end with sales at 4c. for granulated by the Spreckels refinery alone, and at 4 1-16c. by all other refiners. The Spreckels refinery, having thereby been enabled to dispose of their accumulated surplus, advanced prices, and, joining hands with the other Philadelphia refiners, continued the advance to 4 3-16c. for granulated, and gave the opportunity to the New York refiners to take the trade at 1-16 per lb. less—say at 4⅛c. for western buyers, or 4¼c. for eastern buyers. This fact seems to show that an understanding, expressed or implied, exists between the opposition refiners as to the supplying of the demand without further competition in prices for the present at least ; but the demoralization of the preceding week can scarcely be considered as without present effect, and the trade of the country has dropped again into a hand-to-mouth basis, and there are no signs of any further improvement during the present week. One notable fact seems to have been brought out by the recent course of the refined sugar market, and that is that whenever the Spreckels refinery have accumulated a large surplus of production, the other Philadelphia refiners must stand aside until it is disposed of at a cut of 1-16c. under the market, or else suffer the consequences of a sharp decline in prices. The American Sugar Refining Company therefore appears to be a supporter of the Spreckels Company, although evidently under some peculiar arrangement, which is very difficult to explain intelligently. Another notable fact in connection with the refined market since the 1st of April is that the grocers of the country have repeatedly been free buyers of sugars whenever the price was near 4c. per lb., and that whenever it rises much above that level they abstain from buying to the best of their ability, and wait for something to happen which shall again reduce prices to their views. This is what appears to be taking place at the present moment, but a large and increasing demand for the fruit canning season would delay any downward reaction probably until that demand was well supplied.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

Not much has been done in either product. Prices are steady. Syrups are wanted chiefly in dark grades, which are not to be had, while molasses is scarcely wanted at all.

TEAS.

Business continues to grow more active in teas. A good many Indians and Ceylons are on the market, and all but the lowest grades of Japans. On Monday, Perkins, Ince & Co., received ex s. s. Parthia, a direct shipment of Young Hysons, the first that has reached this market this year. There is nothing new to report from London concerning Indian and Ceylon. Shipments from

MARKETS—Continued.

Galcutta, to 31st July, were 18,830,000 lbs. against 14,540,000 lbs. for the same period last season.

According to McMeekin & Co.'s notes on Indian and Ceylon teas for the month of July, 1891, the offerings of Indian were 48,000 packages, against 28,000 packages in the same month of 1890. Only a small proportion of this quantity was old season's tea. Although not inferior to the average of early arrivals, the new season's were mostly thin and lacking in quality. There were among them very few teas with attractive liquors, but towards the close of the month several good invoices from Assam and the Dooars were offered. In the depressed state of the market, most of the offerings had a bad reception in public sale, and quotations are now considerably lower than those recently current. The quality of the tea to arrive for sale in August show a decided improvement from several districts, but there will be a very large preponderance of poor liquoring sorts. The quantity plucked up till latest telegraphic advices from the gardens is still little in excess of last season's at the same date. The average of public sale prices for the month was about 9¼d. per lb.

The offerings of Ceylon were 64,000 packages, against 61,000 packages in the same month of 1890. A large proportion of this quantity was poor and unattractive in character, which was freely taken, but at a very low level of price. There was spirited competition throughout the month for all full-flavored teas, anything really good fetching high prices. On such a considerable advance must be quoted. From Colombo the shipments have during the month been on a more moderate scale than recently, and it is reported that teas of better quality are coming forward. The average of public sale prices for the month was about 9d. per lb. against about 10½d. per lb. for the corresponding month last year.

The first of the new season's China teas were offered on the 3rd July, but did not attract much attention from the home trade. The quality was considered better than for several years past, and prices ranged from 7½d. to 3s. per lb. Only small and unattractive offerings of Javas have been made during the month.

PETROLEUM.

This market remains steady at prices for sometime current. The upward movement in the United States market has so far been without influence here. Business is but moderate.

The Petrolia Advertiser reports: Petrolia crude 1.34 1-2 per bbl. Oil Springs crude $1.34 1-2 per bbl. No change has taken place since our last issue in either crude or refined, nor do we expect any during this month. Oil matters are more quiet than dull, and in the month of September a lively business is expected. Very few transactions in crude have taken place during the past week, but the price remains firm at $1.34 1-2 to $1.35.

Refined is still selling at 12 1-2 cents in car lots, f. o. b. here, at sixty days or two per cent off for cash.

DRUGS AND CHEMICALS.

A mild midsummer demand is all that the market has to respond to, and that does not create excitement in anything. The price list is unchanged throughout.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

There is no movement of large lots. Not often is there any transaction involving 25 tubs. There was one on Monday. The price was 13c. There is less stiffness apparently on the part of country holders, as they are offering quite freely in lots of 100 and 120 tubs at prices slightly below those going for trade lots, but the commission men have no use for stock at the proffered figures, as they are too high for the markets to which they look for purchasers. A dealer who had an offer of 14c. some weeks ago for a 100-tub lot, and who thought fit to refuse it at the time, has been on the market this week seeking in vain to get the same offer again. The prices ruling to-day are those which have held for weeks, and are based on the supposition that only ordinary trade lots are moving. They are 14 and 15c. There is no movement of creamery tub.

Cheese is fairly active at 9½c.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

BEANS—There have been some 50 bag lots handled at $1.70, and only medium stock at that. Demand and supply are both low.

DRIED APPLES—Are nominal at 8½ to 9c.

EVAPORATED APPLES—Lifeless and nominal at 13½ to 14c.

EGGS—Are still exceedingly dull at 12 to 13c. Further concessions would be made if sales would follow. Hot weather and declined consumption made the holding of stock undesirable.

HAY—Is abundant at $11.50 to $12 for either old or new timothy. There is no inquiry for clover.

HIDES—Are steady at 5 to 5½c. for No. 1 green. Cured are 6½c. two cars having sold at that price since our last report.

HONEY—Receives little attention on account of the abundance of fruit. Prices are 7 to 10c. for clear and 14 to 16c. for comb.

HOPS—There has been little change in prices. What stock remains on hand goes out at 33c. in four and five bale lots. There is not much activity, however.

POTATOES—Are in a very weak state. Barrels are 75c. to $1.

SKINS—Pelts and lambskins are now sufficiently wooled to rank as sheepskins, as which they are now classed at 55c.

STRAW—Is wanted at $6 to $7 for oat.

WOOL—Is very dull at 18 to 19c.

FISH.

The fish trade languishes through its offspell. Business will be dull until the beginning, at least, of September. The prices quoted last week hold now. They are 6½ to 7c. for white fish, salmon trout and pickerel, and $1.75 to $2 for lake herring.

GREEN FRUIT.

The week's trade has been fairly satisfactory, the demand having improved perceptibly under the fine weather. Stocks have kept pretty much in the same state as a week ago, the output being attended by only moderate replenishment from time to time. There are a few Valencias, brought here from the New York market, to sell at $6.50. Jamaicas will not be brought in untfl the small fruit excitement is over. Sorrento oranges are unchanged, and the chief line on the market, at $4.50. Lemons are locally unchanged at $4.50 for Palermos, and $4.75 for Messinas. Bananas are $1.25 to $1.50.

SMALL FRUITS, ETC.

California plums are $2.25. Clingstone peaches are 75c. a basket, California peaches $1.75, Delaware freestones $1.50 per half bushel basket. Bartlett pears are $3.50 in cases and kegs. Tomatoes are 75c. a basket. Apples are $1 to $1.50 per barrel, and are a drug on the market. Lawton berries are 10c.

PROVISIONS.

The market has lost none of the tone that operations up to the end of last week had communicated to it. There is a large space to fill in the demand during the next two months, and that circumstance, rather than instant needs, is priming prices. Movement in carlots has been a less marked feature of this than of last week, but the jobbing trade has increased. There is said to be an unusual proportion of then hogs in the country this year.

BACON—Is 8½ to 8¾c. for long clear, the latter price for very small quantities. A car was sold on Monday morning on private terms, but there was no concession on prices formerly taken. Bellies are 10½ to 11c. backs 11c., rolls 9c.

HAMS—Are 12½ to 13c. for smoked, which are in small compass and very firm. Pickled are 11c.

LARD—Pure is very scarce at 10¼c. in tubs and 10¾c. in pails, while compound is 8½ to 9c.

MESS PORK—There is no Canadian heavy. A carload of United States has been received this week to sell at $15. Canadian short cut is $16.50 to $17.

SALT.

Salt goes into trade at about the average pace at this season. There is no change in car prices, which are : 70c. for sacks, $1.25 for dairy, $1.20 for barrels.

DRY GOODS.

The trade is looking up. The business of the moment does not call for special comment unless to say that it is rather slow, but reports from the country indicate a latent demand that will become very active in a few weeks.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Aug 20, 1891.

There has been no change in the position since a week ago, and the activity in sugar, excepted, matters generally are quiet. Indications, though, are favorable on the whole, and with the continuation of favorable reports regarding the crops a generally hopeful feeling prevails.

SUGAR AND SYRUP.

There are but little signs of let up in the demand for sugar, which goes to show that stocks must have run down, extraordinarily low, or this continued call would not have been possible. Refineries are quoting granulated at 4⅝ to 4¾c. and yellows 3⅜ to 4⅜c. There are no raws here to speak of, the supplies to which we referred in our last having been cleared off, round lots going at 3¾ to 4c., which basis was only possible for large quantities. Some more are expected to arrive shortly, but the quantity is not considerable. For smaller quantities we quote 4 to 4¼c.

Offerings of syrup are light but the demand is small, so that they are ample. We quote 2¾ to 3¼c. as the range.

MOLASSES.

A fair jobbing movement is noted in molasses, recent cutting having induced a better demand. Barbadoes move at 37 to 37½ in 50 barrel lots.

COFFEES AND SPICES.

Coffee continues in good enquiry and values rule firm under light stocks. A shipment of Rio is on the way between here and New York, the enquiry for which is brisk. For what business there has been done here 20½ to 21c. is the idea, Jamaica ruling about the same. Spices continue dull and there is little business to note. The only sale we heard of was a round lot of pepper on Western account at 9½c.

RICE.

A fair movement is to note in rice and business is of an average character. We quote prices the same. Patna $4.50 to $5, choice $4.25 to $4.50, Standard, $3.90 and off grades $3.50 in car lots.

DRIED FRUIT.

There has been little doing in the way of actual business in dried fruit. Raisins have been quiet with but little demand for old stock, prices ruling unchanged for what business there is doing at 4 to 4¼c. The first shipments of new fruit on Montreal account from Denia are expected in the course of a few days, and cannot possibly be here for three or four weeks. Business for fall shipment has been done, but the terms as yet are kept private. Currants are, if anything, a little earlier in New York for round lots, but our market has not shown much change. Stocks here are still comparatively light, and we report our quotations of a week ago, viz., 5⅞ to 6¼c.

CANNED GOODS.

There is only a small local demand for canned goods, buyers preferring to operate only for immediate wants in anticipation of the new pack, some lines of which are offering.

GREEN FRUIT.

In staple lines of green fruit business is quiet, with business mostly directed to fresh arrivals of new stock which are referred to elsewhere. Lemons rule at $3.50 to $4, and oranges $3.50 to $4.50 per box

NEW GREEN FRUIT.

The feature of the market recently has been the free receipt of apples, especially so to-day, and prices in consequence are easier all round. Red Astrachan move readily at $1 to $1.40 and Duchess $1.50 to $1.75. Bartlett pears sell at $5 to $8 the barrel and $1.50 to $2 in half barrels. Peaches are easy at 85 to $1 California fruit are unchanged, receipts to-day fair. Pears sell at $2.25 to $3.25, peaches $1.75 to $3 and plums $1.75 to $2.

HOPS.

There is nothing to say about the local market for the simple reason that no business is doing at all. Only a few small lots of 1890 are offering here, and they would be sold at 20c. if such a bid could be had.

PROVISIONS.

The demand for provisions has been of a quiet sort, and as compared with the position a week ago, there is no change in prices. Canadian short cut, per barrel is quoted at $17.25 to $17.50; mess pork, western, per barrel $15.25 to $15.75; short cut, western, per brl $17.25 to $17.50; hams, city cured, per pound 10½ to 11½c.; hams, canvassed, per lb 0 00 to 0 00c.; lard, Canadian, in pails, 8¾ to 9c.; bacon, per pound, 9 to 10c.; lard, com., refined, per lb, 7¾ to 8c.

EGGS.

Reports from the country state that offerings are freer, but so far there has been no appreciable change here except a somewhat easier feeling and we now quote fine caudled 13c. and ordinary 12¼ to 12½c.

BUTTER.

There is little to say of the butter market and the position is just as it was. High figures have been paid in the country for both creamery and dairy stock which were not warranted by the general run of report enquiry, and limits on this connection still do not leave buyers a decent margin on which to operate. Shipments to date are larger than last year, but cheap American stock in bond make up considerable in this item. Creamery 18¼ to 19½c., Townships dairy 16 to 18c., Morrisburg and Brockville 16 to 17c., Western dairy 14 to 15c.

CHEESE.

Speculative buying in the west by two leading firms who generally engineer a deal in July stock, has given the market a rather sharp hoist, higher in fact than the natural movement of business warrants. In consequence of this there is a regular flurry for cheese, and prices are almost 1c. higher than they were a week ago, owing to the fact that everyone is afraid of being left in the matter of supplies. It remains to be seen whether the figures paid will result profitably, in fact it is simply a question between the holder on this side and the British buyer on the other. If the latter can't do without the chees he will have to pay for it if not the reverse. The

"OUR NATIONAL FOODS," put up in packages only, are not ordinary foods. They are prepared by the conversion of the starch into dextrine. THEY CONTAIN OVER DOUBLE THE NOURISHMENT THAT IS IN FLESH MEAT. A 4 lb. PACKAGE OF IRELAND'S DESICCATED WHEAT AT 25c. CONTAINS 30 GRAINS MORE NOURISHMENT THAN 10 lbs. OF BEEFSTEAK COSTING ABOUT $1.50. THINK OF THAT. GRAIN.

The grain market has exhibited no particular change, the flurry in the West having no effect on our market. Peas are somewhat lower. The stocks in store in Montreal compared with those of a week ago show an increase of 16,850 bushels of wheat, and a decrease of 31,387 bushels of peas, 14,601 bushels of oats, 944 bushels of barley. Compared with a year ago there is an increase of 146,739 bushels of wheat and a decrease of 66,842 bushels of corn, 59,922 bushels of peas, 11,949 bushels of oats, 18,179 bushels of barley. We quote:—No. 2 hard Manitoba, $1.05; to $1.07; No. 3 do., 97c; No. 2 Northern, 96 to 97; feed do., 70c; peas 87c. per 66 pounds in store; 88c. afloat; Manitoba oats; 37c. Upper Canada do., 42c. per 34 pounds; corn, 75 to 80c. duty paid; feed barley, 55c.; good malting do., nominal.

FLOUR AND MEAL

There is no change in flour, the local demand being of a small hand to mouth character, while we note nothing particular on export account. There is a decrease of 843 brls. in stock as compared with a week ago, and 4,548 as compared with a year ago. Patent spring $5.25 to $5.50; patent winter $5.25 to $5.45; straight roller $4.80 to $4.90; extra $4.50 to $4.60; superfine $4.00 to $4.10; city strong bakers' $5.25 to $0.00; strong bakers' $5,00 to $5.20.

There is nothing new to note concerning meal, the demand being small. Stocks in store have increased 75 barrels compared with a week ago and decreased 129 with a year ago. Standard $2.80 to $2.90; granulated $2.80 to $2.90; rolled $2.80 to $2.90.

FEED.

Feed of all kinds is in good demand and prices are shady. We quote shorts $19 to $21, bran $15 to $16, middlings $22 to $25 and moullie $22 to $28.

SIGN YOUR NAME PLAINLY.

Why make it so small that it requires unusual care and keen eyesight to read it? Why make it so complicated that no human being but its maker can decipher it? Why sprawl it all all over a check or letter sheet? The writing of a signature is not a small matter with those whose correspondence reaches thousands of letters daily. We have frequently seen all the force in an office sqend half an hour to decipher a signature which should have been so written as to be read at a glance. Some foolishly entertain the idea that an intricate signature is less easily forged, when the truth is that one that is plain and bold is extremely hard to copy. As examples of what a signature should be, study those of George Washington, John Hancock, Hon. Hamilton Fish. If you want to be eccentric take Horace Greely's signature for a model, but spare, oh, spare us your ideas of sprawl, complexity, novelty under the mistaken notion that it ensures safety. It robs others of time and patience and is a nuisance to every one who handles it, unless thoroughly conversant with your abnormal sign manual. These remarks are prompted by the receipt of a signature measuring five-sixteenths of an inch, although it is composed of nine letters, and should occupy not less than one and one half inches, and better if two.—American Grocer.

DON'T DO THINGS BY HALVES.

The most successful men that we have seen either in our time or in history have been those who have not done things by halves. There have been hundreds of men who would have proved themselves successful beyond question, if they had had the capacity to put their entire soul, body and energy into the work in which they were engaged. Truly speaking it is the man who does not do things by halves that succeeds. He succeeds in a most emphatic manner, or if perchance he does not succeed he fails with a promptitude that would put an astronomical calculation into disgrace. There never was in the history of the world a successful general who went into battle with a half-heartiness, or a disposition to suspect defeat. It is exactly the same in business as in war. The individual who enters into any undertaking with doubt, cannot possibly expect to succeed. The will power has a great deal to do with success; so also has conviction. There have been many arguments successfully contended simply because, one of the contestants has really believed in the absolute superiority of his position and the views he had undertaken to defend. Business is unquestionably built on the same lines, and the business man who really enters into the competition of life with a determination to force matters is bound to succeed. It is the half-hearted, unappreciative individual, who does not desire to defend his judgment, or to rely upon his own conviction, who ultimately fails.

There is not at the present time a single general of note who will dispute the fact that many battles have been won simply from the inherent conviction of their superiority, not only physically, but also from a strictly stragetical standpoint. We might almost say that faith not in superstition, but faith in one's own ability conquers where merit sometimes fails.

Napoleon the great, and he is justly designated, is the authority for the expression, "There is no such word as can't." He did not believe that the vocabulary of the world contained such a word. And the Iron Duke, who was his only real competitor and ultimate conqueror, was unquestionably of the same opinion. Any one who came to him with the apology that he "could not do what was set him to do" was unworthy of the profession he followed and the sooner he was hanged the better. It is surprising what a man could do if he only has the capacity not to "do things by halves." Suppose that you had some great undertaking and that you had decided to go into this undertaking with the object of making money. It would be perfectly ridiculous if you were to go into it feeling that there was a great possibility that you would not succeed. This is doing things by halves, and you cannot possibly conduct a successful business upon these lines.

Energy many times counts for more than discretion. How many men in battle have succeeded in obtaining recognition and advancement not because they had displayed a large amount of discretion, but because they have displayed an utter contempt for conventionalities. It was not the observance of cautiousness or hesitancy that caused Napoleon to make Ney a Marshal of the French army. On the contrary, it was his absolute recklessness, putting it in a mild form, that caused his promotion. Timidity is by no means a very valuable friend. It may be of value amongst a lot of men who do not aspire more than the brain of mediocrity, but where genius is wanted it utterly fails.

Don't do things by halves. Whether it is the sweeping of your store or the purchase of a million dollars' worth of goods. Don't do things by halves, whether it is the collection of outstanding accounts or the full attention to a small fad that a customer may desire to have shown to him. Don't do things by halves, whether it is writing a letter to a disagreeable customer or acknowledging the receipt fully by a member of the firm of a small item which may be remitted; Don't do things by halves, whether the engagement of an office boy at $2 a week or a salesman at $10,000 a year. Life is made up of those who regard it as a reality. They are those who unquestionably get the most out of it. They do not live the longest, but they "get there just the same." There never was nor never will be a confirmed success of those who do things by halves. The improvements in machinery and in the methods of conducting business are such that those who refuse to come into the circle will realize that it is the patient, energetic individual who insists upon everything being done in its completeness who will succeed.

We commenced by saying, "Don't do things by halves," and we are absolutely convinced that those who follow the old cautiousness of the past will get miserably left. Our advice to the young and to the old is explicit and emphatic: "Don't do things by halves," particularly with regard to those who cannot pay their bills when they are due. In short, the man who does set out in this life to do things by halves and to thoroughly succeed will find himself unquestionably "in the soup." We would say to all our readers, big and little, of great experience and small experience, and of every other degree of mercantile pursuits. "Don't do things by halves." You will then be much happier and infinitely more contented with this world's gifts.—National Grocer.

BUYER AND SELLER.

Perhaps in no department of trade is there unity of opinion, says the Canadian Trade Review, regarding the relative merits and worth of the commercial buyer and seller. It is a point upon which it is probable that there will always be differences of opinion. To A. T. Stewart, the American merchant prince, is credited the statement that a saleman is not very hard to find; that, if not readily found, it would be easy to train one; but that a buyer—that is, of course, a good buyer—is, like the poet, born, not made. Yet even this experienced judgment can hardly be said to apply in all cases. It may be that the buyer is of supreme importance in his own department, but his relations to the public and even to the trade, are limited. We agree with a contemporary in its statement that the buyer of raw material for the manufacturer is not generally known outside of a comparatively small circle handling raw products. Even the buyer for the jobber, or purchasing agent as he is more generally termed, operates within a comparatively small circle of manufacturers or importers, although his dealings are of immense magnitude, larger by far than those of any salesman of like experience and standing. He is a factor in the market, yet in a limited sense and not as the purchaser who is himself a seller that directs and deals directly with the consumer. Necessarily, buyers are not so numerous as salesmen and for that reason alone are not so well known through all the ramifications of trade and commerce down to the consumer. Yet no one would underrate the importance of the seller to the trade at large nor deny that the successful salesman has acquired an art of as great value to himself and his employer as the buyer could possibly attain. To the student of human nature the salesman is a greater and more interesting study than the buyer, and this is true whether the art of selling is represented by the man behind the counter, in the store, or by the commercial traveler whose life is spent on the road. The successful saleman must himself be a student of human nature and a close observer of persons especially, the better to enable him to deal with his customer. Patience, caution, and determination are also elements in the make up of a good salesman. It is difficult to realize the tax to which these characteristics are often subjected, especially the trait of patience. Customers are naturally unsympathetic and sometimes imagine it a special privilege to exact for themselves more than ordinary deference. But the salesman must take no umbrage—nor could a buyer under like circumstances—that's what he is there for, to sell if he can, but at all events not to antagonize the customer. The latter is especially true in retailing, and the storekeeper who is his own salesman, finds it especially incumbent on him to restrain himself, as so many have learned by unpleasant experience.

TOO BUSY TO DO BUSINESS.

There are merchants who, if they repeated declarations may be taken as true, are too busy to do business. Traveling men meet them every day, and are rebuffed by them. They ask but five minutes, or ten minutes, to show their lines of goods, but the merchant is too busy to grant the time. In most cases this excuse for turning the salesman away without a hearing is a petty fabrication, and where it is not, there is something radically wrong with the machinery of the concern. To be able to buy well is quite as important as to sell well. Indeed, it is doubtful if goods badly bought can be sold well. Therefore the firm whose buyer has not time to examine the goods that are in the market is placed at a disadvantage, and needs to employ more buyers. The retailer who has no time to examine samples loses many an opportunity for profit. And what is true in this particular, as it relates to salesmen, is also true in regard to everything that pertains to business. The merchant should have time for everything that pertains to business, and every man who calls upon matters of this sort should be accorded a hearing. The merchant who is "too busy" to investigate matters pertaining to his business is not going to win the largest success.—Ex.

The retail grocers of Minneapolis recently organized a grand parade to celebrate the Early Closing Movement. There were a large number of mottoes displayed on banners and transparencies and carried in the procession, among which were the following:

"We are slaves no longer."

"Hurrah for the families who patronize us."

"Now we can visit our girls once in a while."

"Give the grocer clerks a rest."

"Your grocer is humane; let him close at 7."

"No longer do we work 16 hours per day."

"We are not Chinese."

"Grocers and their clerks are not nighthawks."

"Close at 11—That is tough! Close at 7—Good enough!"

"We will have a chance to get acquainted with our families."

"The back door is closed at 7 o'clock too."

"If you expect to go to Heaven, buy your groceries before 7."

"The Nights of labor are a thing of the past."

"Go court your wives anew."

"We are always with you."

"We warrant all goods before 7 P.M."

"We are in it. Who kicks? Nobody but cranks."

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER issued weekly, subscription price $2.00 per year.

WHY Do 75 per cent. of our Canadian Canners buy their labels and other lithographic work from

The Sabiston Litho. & Pub. Co.?

BECAUSE They have the largest corps of skilled Artists in the country.

BECAUSE They have the best machinery.

BECAUSE Their equipment is more complete than any other Litho. house in the country, and

BECAUSE They turn out the most satisfactory work.

This Company occupies 4 flats of the GAZETTE building, in Montreal, equal to a floo space of 35,000 square feet.

The business was commenced a little over 3 years ago by A. Sabiston and from the smallest establishment at that time has grown within the above period to be the largest of its kind in the country. This fact speaks for itself.

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

The statement made in these columns a fortnight ago, that "it seems to be the case that there are fewer failures among members of associations than among non-members," is not only questioned but is contradicted by the Philadelphia Cash Grocer. Our contemporary is good enough to see in the phrase "it seems" a sort of rear-guard upon which we can retire if we find our general position untenable. We are not yet convinced, however, that we have advanced too far. We believed what we said, and believe it still, but as we had not the whole field of observation under our eye, we left the proposition in the dependent form. So far as Canadian experience goes the statement is in accordance with the facts. It is based upon the weekly reports of the commercial agencies which had been watched a long time before the statement was ventured. And while it is in accordance with facts, it is also in accordance with reason. The statement, within the limits of Canadian experience, is not more anomalous than untrue.

* * * *

There is abundant proof in the records of associations, as well as in the actual circumstances of business, that radical reforms in methods and conditions of trade have been effected through the agency of associations. And there is no direction a trade reform can take so as not to have a bearing upon solvency. Anything that tends to soften the asperities of competition is of economical value, and if association effort bears no other fruit than to make rival grocers friendly, it is of commercial service to them. Which is the stand-point that a man in any department of activity is going to make the more progress from: that of jealous isolation from his peers, or that of friendly, frictionless inter-communion with them? Undoubtedly the latter is the relation that it best pays a trader to stand in towards his fellows. It does him more good to be in such a relation to them. It enlarges the nature of the man to share in and contribute to the community of opinion that the traders of his class and locality can fund in an association. "Brethren in council but rivals in the field" are live men in business or any other kind of competition.

* * * *

Even if the statement that associations are nurseries of solvency were developed merely from the theoretic aims and objects of associations, and not from their practical results, the counter-statement of the Cash Grocer would scarcely dispose us to let go of it as an opinion. Undoubtedly association men ought to be able as a rule to avoid the pitfalls of business more than non-association men do. One reason for this opinion is given in the preceding paragraph. Another is, that associations are not made up of so diverse elements as the non-associated trade is. Associations are not only collections; they are also selections. That is to say, those who join associations are a pretty safe class of traders. Their joining of the association is only one evidence among many that their course affords of business sagacity. They join the association as they sell or buy their goods, as they meet their payments, and perform their other business functions. It is one of the steps by which they show their rank as business men, and a body made up of select men ought to show a higher average of success in the struggle to keep solvent than a heterogeneous body. The man who means to cut does not join as a rule. It is also manifest that those who stand out of an association are at the disadvantage of competing against the solid body as a whole. The many against one contest is in favor of the association people.

* * * *

The Cash Grocer seems to think that its dissent from our statement calls for a defence of its friendship towards associations, and unless the trade of Philadelphia is peculiar, it would seem as if our contemporary had little warrant for throwing this bucket of cold water upon the idea of organization among grocers. If organization does not promote, directly or indirectly, the financial well being of the trade, what good does it do? That is the end toward which all benefits tend, and if it does not further that then it does no good. Hence there is nothing in them to merit the friendship of the Cash Grocer or of anybody else, if associations fail in the respect wherein our contemporary says they do. Why therefore does that paper refrain from condemning as altogether vain and useless the whole association idea? It declares itself friendly to associations, though it denies that they realize the one end for which they were called into existence. Or, if it admits that grocers' associations benefit the retailer in any respect, it cancels its own assertion that there are as many of its members fail as there are of other grocers. It should go the whole hog or none. Associations are good or bad; they are not indifferent. If the Cash Grocer had said they were indifferent, it would have wound up its comments more consistently, though not more justly than it did. To say they are useless but praisworthy is nonsense.

ALL IS NOT GOLD THAT GLITTERS.

Counterfeiters, like thoroughgoing burglars and other rogues by profession, are dishonest from principle. Their perversion of certain principles makes something of a science of their calling. They therefore take an interest in it, that is not entirely derived from the excitement of its risks or from the comfortable exemption from hard work it affords. One of the principles to which counterfeiters hold, for example, is a cynical disbelief in business honor. They probably consider they have ample warrant for their disbelief in this species of virtue, but the difficulty is, that not all human beings in like positions to certain others in contemplation, can be depended on to act as those others did. The fact that twenty respected men are open to temptation does not afford safe premises from which to conclude that any other given respected man will yield to equal or even greater temptation. The sweeping generalization that all men are venal is what is unsound in the position of the counterfeiter. Only when it is considered how cardinal an assumption this is in the profession of the counterfeiter, can it be understood why the most sterling men in trade are approached by these tempters. It is of course to the advantage of the counterfeiter to do business with men the reputation of whose honesty and financial standing is unquestioned in the community where such they are sought to be installed as "agents." We frequently wonder why the blacklegs and very needy men of a district are not the ones to whom overtures are made for buying fraudulent "green goods," but the reason lies in the two considerations presented above.

One of the principals in a well-known grocery house in this city, received a few days ago a confidential letter from one of these "green goods" men. The recipient of the communication is a strictly honorable man, and if he were not, his means put him above the temptation held out by money-making artists. He handed the stuff over to THE GROCER as a curiosity. The letter is a prolix affair. It abounds in aphorisms of honesty and maxims of business thrift that would do credit to a better cause. The moral argument in favor of dealing in "green goods" is not left out. The plea that Uncle Sam has millions of the people's money lying idle and unproductive in his Treasury is urged in extenuation, and the attempt to make wrong right is well calculated to break down a weak man's scruples. The bustling business tone of the letter, the confidential, even affectionate language in which it is couched, and the safeguards it represents the circulation of the money to be surrounded by, make it a dangerous document in the hands of greedy people. It is remarkable how unreservedly and withal safely, these counterfeit men throw themselves on the mercy of those they would lure into their unlawful traffic. There is a contemptuous pity too commonly allowed to stand between these men and their exposure to the proper authorities. They ought to be exposed. Not only do they corrupt people of weak principles, but they make perfectly sound men the instruments of their villainy, as any man may unwittingly receive at third hand and circulate the spurious stuff. Every citizen is in danger of losing his money and of being imprisoned for handling false currency, even in the best of faith. If the worst man in the world should fail to prove the source and manner whereby he got such money to be lawful, so far as he was concerned, he is liable to be made the scapegoat of the counterfeiter and his accomplices.

The particular letter to which reference was made in a preceding paragraph was accompanied by what was represented to be a clipping from a newspaper. The clipping was, from evidence on the face of it, as fraudulent as the money. The matter alleged to be thus clipped is in the form of a news item, explaining how a certain wealthy man who died suddenly had got his wealth. It was as the circulator of false money. Then the money is described as made from genuine plates stolen from the Treasury by one of the workmen, and it is represented that expert sworn testimony maintained the stuff was as good as if the notes were genuine. All such matter is humbug intended to delude the unwary. The alleged clipping is composed by a type setting machine, so that but one person is a party to that portion of the fraud. Nobody should hesitate to expose these fellows at once to the U. S. Treasury Department.

FISH NARRATIVES.

The Toronto Retail Grocers' pic-nic was this year, as every other year, a matter of all work and no play to the committee which had it in charge The preparations that have to be made for it weeks beforehand and the management of it during its progress, leave little time for enjoyment to the hustling committee. They generally have their turn when the thing is over and the business which follows it has been brought to a conclusion. This year the members of the committee betook themselves to the shady retreats, the cool waters and picturesque scenery of Muskoka. For a day or two the rocks and vales of that romantic district reverberated with the sounds of their glee, as they chased each other through its virgin wilds. Long will the denizens and transient sojourners remember how full the woods seemed when this handful of men began their sylvan revelry. And though there are many lakes in Muskoka, and deep ones too, as well as dense forests, the committee got back without the loss of a man. There was nothing heard of two or three of them for a few days, but they turned up all right before any search was begun.

Their friends have heard from them since they came back, for they all have fishing adventures to tell about. And good stories they are. The other day we ran across a manual of fishing-stories—which, by the way, no sport should be without—that we intended to read up during our own holidays at the end of the century, so as to be able to give an interesting account of how we enjoyed ourselves. We have looked into it but fail to find any of the anecdotes that have been so graphically and frequently told of the fishing that was done by the committee in Muskoka. The book is now a tame affair, having been entirely superseded by the association lads. When their wives and families heard the descriptions that were given of the lovely speckled trout their guardians had taken, their admiration was great. They naturally longed to see the matchless beauties. They were told that "Gibson and some of the other fellows" had the fish of the party in charge, and would soon be down with them. We ourselves listened with respectful but experienced incredulity to some of the exciting accounts. Who has not, when the fancy is free and the thirst quenched, been able to tell how he landed a nine-pounder, to describe the doubtful struggle between man and fish, and show how the strategy of the game wound the line round a log, how capsizes were averted and how weary the three men were who carried the day's catch across a lot?

The fishermen returned and entertained their friends, who listened with bated breath to the tales of deeds done with baited hook. The rear-guard also returned, but had no fish for their friends of the interesting anecdotes. Fish did come, but the men who brought them stoutly affirmed that they themselves caught them. Alas! 'twas ever thus. Now the only hope of the disappointed sports is with the hotel man, and as he is said to be a decent fellow, well aware of the fact that a fish tale ought to be illustrated by fish, it is likely he will forward those caught by the narrators. We hope he will. Worms are high in Muskoka and the man who gets them has to rise early. So it is with the fish.

The village of Portland, on Rideau Lake, was the scene of a bad fire on the 20th inst. The place is utterly without protection, and nothing but the most determined work saved the whole village from destruction. The flames were first seen at 1.30 o'clock in the rear of a building occupied by Fred C. Heath, general merchant, and the G. N. W. Telegraph Co. Before all the villagers could be aroused, the flames had got under such headway that scarcely anything was saved from the whole building.

BUTTER AND EGGS IN ENGLAND.

Mr. John Dyke, Canadian Government agent at Liverpool, sends to the Department of Agriculture some interesting information relative to the egg trade with Great Britain, which it would be well for exporters to make careful note of. He says that owing to the fact of three or four shipments of Canadian eggs having arrived in England recently not properly selected and carelessly packed, the demand for them has somewhat fallen off, otherwise the prices all round would have been higher

"The most successful Canadian shipper is Mr. Wilson, of seaforth. His eggs are carefully selected, well packed and properly shipped; that is, they are placed in a cool part of the ship, not near the machinery, where they are liable to sweat. The consequence is that at present Mr. Wilson's eggs are fetching 8 shillings per long hundred (ten dozen), while for inferior and badly shipped Canadian eggs prices are down as low as 5s. 6d. The best Irish eggs are today selling at 7s. 6d. to 8s.; German, 5s. to 6s. 6d.; Danish, 7s. to 7s. 8d., and Russian 5s. 2d. to 6s. Very few French eggs reach the Liverpool market, but choice selected French eggs are realizing from 7s. to 8s. per 120. The prices are said to be abnormally high for the time of the year. They usually rise from this time until Chaistmas, but of course they cannot be guaranteed; they may fall. The eggs must be sent in Belgian packing in packages of 1,200 eggs with one division. Mr. Wilson seems to have met the requirements of this market admirably. I may add that the best grade of Canadian eggs weighs from 16½ lbs. to 17½ lbs. per 120."

It will be seen from the foregoing observation that Canadian eggs, properly selected, packed and shipped will command the highest price in the British market. There is not the slightest excuse for slipshod packing, and if regard be paid to Mr. Dyke's hints and the suggestions made in the department bulletins, there is no reason why Canadian eggs should not bring the very highest prices in the markets of the old land.

Mr. Dyke does not write very encouragingly with regard to the shipments of Canadian butter to Britain. He says what is going over is of very poor quality. Some shipments of American butters, manufactured on the creamery principle, are also being made to the mother country, but even these leave much to be desired. The prices of American creamery at present are 87s. to 90s. per 112 pounds; Limerick and Clonmel, 108s.; Danish, 104s.; whilst French margarine, in itself superior to any butter ever shipped from Canada, is selling at 98s. per 112 pounds. Unless Canadian butter is made on the factory principle, says Mr. Dyke, and some little intelligence is put into the business, it can never hope to find a place on this market. Mr. Kirkwood, of Orillia, recently brought here (Liverpool) two or three packages of specially selected butter. This was much better than the ordinary shipments and was packed in tin-lined tubs. This would realize about 80s. per 112 pounds. In butter for the English market there must be quality, uniformity, careful salting and great care in packing."

THE RETAILERS' SUGAR BOYCOTT ---WHERE IS IT NOW?

Some few months ago the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association passed a resolution pledging themselves to support the St. Lawrence Sugar Refinery, of Montreal, "and in the matter of granulated sugar to sell the product of that refinery only." At a meeting held on the 20th of May, the Montreal Association endorsed the resolution of their Toronto friends, and urged their members by circulars to "strictly adhere to its terms, as a measure of getting for the retailers better prices, and better terms on sugar." It is difficult to understand how the carrying out of such a resolution could possibly result in getting better terms or lower prices. Probably the association imagined that by boycotting the Canada Company they would force the Redpaths to make a cut. If so, we believe the Retail Grocers took the very best means to defeat their object. If an unfair combination existed between the refineries—which we doubt very much—surely the retail grocers could not expect to destroy it by forming a worse. Suppose, for the sake of illustration, that the grocers succeeded in enforcing their resolutions to the letter, and that not a pound of granulated sugar were purchased from the Redpaths, If that were a weak concern it would be forced to close. For, had they the combined wealth of Vanderbilt and Gould would they not, as shrewd business men, do as they did years ago, close down on an unprofitable business and invest their capital in some remunerative enterprise? What then would be the result of the action of the retail grocers? One refinery would be left in Montreal to dictate terms—better terms and better prices for themselves—just as a greater monopoly or avarice might suggest. But there is little danger that such a monopoly will exist. The sugar industries of Canada are not so easily disturbed; and we believe that at present both of the refineries in Montreal are taxed to their utmost capacity in endeavoring to supply the increased demand caused by the decrease in prices consequent upon the removal of the tax. The decrease in the price of sugar, since the retail grocers took their peculiar stand, may enable them to see things in a very different light. We have a word to say to the gentlemen of the Retail Grocers' Association: If you are wise you will rescind your resolutions. Your threat to combine against the refineries may induce them to combine against you, if only for a time, in order to teach you a salutary lesson. Or, if you really think that these refineries are treating you harshly, why not start one of your own? There is surely money enough amongst you for the purpose. —Canadian Trade Review.

"A CERTAIN MAN."

The Philadelphia Cash Grocer should keep cool even tho' the weather be warm. We had supposed from its attacks upon the Boston and Minneapolis Retail Grocers' Associations' card price and sugar system (which in Boston, at least, is the one thing above all others that interests the members), that it condemned associated efforts. Now it says that to entertain such an opinion is to "foully wrong" it. "Law sakes," as the country women say, "that do beat all." And can it be that it has been talking for effect and really does believe in Associations (combines it calls them); but yet in the same issue it says it is opposed to fixing arbitrary prices—and that is just what Boston and Minneapolis do on sugar. Ergo our contemporary is opposed to the principles of those Associations. We thank thee for those words "foully wronged" and "obtuse," esteemed contemporary. We can apply them to you —but we will not—When you say the New England Grocer is "published by an organization of wholesale and retail grocers." No wholesale grocer has anything to do with the publication of the New England Grocer, and you ought to know it. Not one dollar's worth of stock is owned by a wholesaler. Why make such unwarrantable statements? The CANADIAN GROCER having said that "it seems to be the case that there are fewer failures among the members of Associations than among non-members," the Cash Grocer goes off into an explanation that "it seems" means there is a doubt about it. That was not what the CANADIAN GROCER intended to state, and our contemporary knows it. A minister preached from the text "A certain man went down into Jericho," and based his sermon on the word certain. It was a certain not an uncertain, man, he said, etc. Thus our contemporary picks out the unimportant word and hangs a theory upon it. It is very, very warm in Philadelphia just now? Come over to Boston, Brother Scanlan, and get cooled off."—New England Grocer.

THE COUNTRY MERCHANT.

As matter of fact the task with which the average country storekeeper is confronted is quite as difficult as any which puzzles his city brother. At best his constituency is limited, and it is hard to increase it. Trade there is not naturally of a floating character. Everybody has a preference or an antipathy. Everybody being acquainted, thinks he must be given credit. It is hard to collect, hard to work off odds and ends, hard to satisfy the people who are all the time getting posted on city styles and bargain day prices. To please and stimulate one's customers, to get new ones, to keep close enough to popular demand, yet to avoid accumulation of unsalables, to turn one's capital fast enough to make it earn a living profit—these are some of the conundrums the successful solution of which mark the merchant and should enlist for him the admiring appreciation of the mercantile community everywhere.—Commercial Enquirer.

THE WHOLESALE TRADE WITH CONSUMERS.

To the Editor CANADIAN GROCER.

DEAR SIR,—In the GROCER of the 18th I notice your comments on wholesalers selling to consumers, and also "Country Merchants'" remarks. The retailers throughout the country have ample cause for finding fault with wholesalers selling to consumers, and there is more of it done than many people think there is. What would you think of a well-known house sending circulars to the country merchants quoting close prices, on said circulars the note "I sell to the trade only," while at the same time that house is sending circulars to our customers quoting close prices, and on the latter circular the note that "those prices are for goods delivered at your nearest railway station?" Is it fair to us, or is it honest? Only a few days ago I saw at our station here goods for one of our storekeepers from a well-known wholesale house in Toronto, and at the same time goods from the same house to one of his customers here. You would hardly believe that you had wholesalers in your city that would wear two faces, or have the cheek to ask a storekeeper to buy from them after supplying their customers in this way. Nevertheless it is true. If they want to sell to the consumers let them do so, but let them not ask a retailer for an order. I find the farmers and consumers throughout the country are as well posted on wholesale prices as we are, and will quote prices that they can buy at, delivered at their station, and prove it with such circulars as above stated. It is a difficult matter to know just how to remedy the evil. If the Merchants' Convention that was held a few years ago in Hamilton had been followed up, as I think it should have been, annually, this with other evils could have been discussed with good results, and until such annual conventions are arranged for I am afraid we will not be able to get the necessary remedy. However, such houses should be exposed, and every retailer that knows of such unprincipled wholesalers doing business in that way should do what he can to stop it, and withdraw his patronage at once, for there are respectable wholesalers, who will not play such cutthroat game.

MERCHANT.

To the Editor CANADIAN GROCER.

SIR,—The discussion on this subject is getting to be quite interesting, and not a few good points have been made. The question, however, in my mind, is: "Does the retailer support the wholesaler in his efforts to do a strictly wholesale business?" "Is he looked upon by the retailer as the man who should get the orders in preference to the jobber who will sell to anybody and everybody?" I think not, and my opinion is based upon an experience of ever ten years with a wholesale house which has always done their business with the trade only, no consumer, to my knowledge, having ever obtained one dollar's worth of goods from this firm. Another question presents itself: "What thanks does a wholesale house get for doing its business in the manner as above stated?" The solution to the difficulty is easy, and the reason the evil still exists in the trade is easily explained. If the retailers during the past had supported the houses who were endeavoring to do their business in the interests af the retailer, there would be fewer wholesale houses selling to the consumer to-day. I would ask this question: "How many retailers can say they have never endeavored to buy anything outside of their own line of business for use in their own household, and for the sole purpose of getting the article at a little lower than the retail price?"

Knowing these facts, one cannot be blamed for having the opinion that about nine-tenths of the retail trade will buy from any Tom, Dick or Harry who comes along, utterly disregarding the principles of the house represented. The retailer has the remedy in his own hands. It is his duty to use it. Will he do so? Let the retailer reply.

Yours truly,

SKEPTIC.

DO YOUR CLERKS TATTLE?

There is a great deal of truth in the subjoined from the San Francisco Grocer:

Not only should merchants be careful to keep their business affairs to themselves but they should strictly charge their employes to speak to no one, not connected with the establishment, about the business plans of the firm, or the condition of the trade of the house, if not satisfactory. A great amount of harm can be innocently done to the trade of an establishment by talkative clerks. Competitors are naturally anxious to get something of an insight into each other's business affairs, and there is no easier way to obtain such knowledge than from an over communicative employe. Parties under different employers can drop very valuable information in the course of a conversation which, when repeated to the several proprietors may be made use of in such a way as to play havoc with business plans. It is liable to prove far more injurious for employes to mention, even in a casual way, defects in the business, than for competitors to circulate any amount of unfavorable reports, as in the latter case very great allowances are usually made, which, of course, can not be expected in the former, Merchants who are most wise make sure that their business affairs and plans are not generally known.

LONDON RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of the Retail Grocers' Association of London, was held in Sherwood Hall, on August 12th, with the President in the chair.

The minutes of last meeting were confirmed as read.

The officers' roll call found the following at their station: Messrs. A. McCormick, president, W. H. Ferguson, vice-president, R. W. Sharpe, treasurer, W. H. McCutcheon and C. J. Wall of the finance committee, Jas. Fitzgerald and J. B. Murphy, directors, W. H. Brauton, guard, E. Sutton, secretary. Sixteen other members were present as well. Mr. W. H. Ferguson, chairman of the pic-nic committee, gave a short report of the success of the pic-nic and called on the secretary for the financial statement as far as completed. The statement showed the total cash receipts to be $360.58, expenditure to date $168.73. It was moved and seconded, that the report be received and refrered to the finance committee.—Carried.

The President stated that this being our annual meeting the next order of business would be the election of officers for the ensuing year.

The President was requested to vacate the chair, and it was moved and seconded, that Mr. A. McCormick be re-elected President. Mr. McCormick declined the honor, stating that he felt that on account of other duties he could not give the position the attention required for the success of the association, and regretted that he had been obliged during the past year to leave a considerable portion of his duty for others to perform, and he would suggest that Mr. W. H. Ferguson be president. His nomination was therefore withdrawn.

Moved and seconded, that Mr. W. H. Ferguson be president, and there being no further nominations he was declared elected.

Mr. A. McCormick said he was pleased to see that the association was unanimous in electing Mr. Ferguson president and with much pleasure would invite him to take the chair.

Mr. Ferguson on taking the chair said he felt highly honored on being placed in the position of president of this association. He was pleased to see the association in such a flourishing condition as it is at the present time under the management of the retiring president, and would ask the members to assist him in the furtherance of the interests of the association, and trusted that the coming year would see the work through united effort pushed forward with success. He had not forgotten the day when some half dozen of the grocers' first spoke of forming an association. It was said that it could not be done in the city of London, as there was too much jealousy in the trade. He was pleased to know,however, that they had succeeded in forming as good an association as existed in Ontario to-day. (Cheers).

Nominations for vice-president were then called for. It was moved and seconded that Mr. John Scandrett be vice-president. There being no other nominations, Mr. Scandrett was declared elected.

Mr. Scandrett thanked the members for placing him in the position of vice-president, but was not sure that they would have as good a vice this coming year as they had during the past. He would, however, do all in his power to further their interests. He felt that the association had been the means of bringing about a better feeling among the grocers at the present time than ever existed to his knowledge during the past thirty years, and hoped this friendly feeling would continue to increase as it should. There should be no jealousy in the trade. It was time all such petty feelings were done away with.

It was moved and seconded that all the remaining officers be reappointed.

Mr. R. W. Sharpe requested that the association appoint some one as Treasurer in his place, as he was too far away from the other officers, and suggested that some one be appointed convenient to the Secretary's office, and with the consent of the mover and seconder of the above resolution would decline the nomination of treasurer.

It was then moved and seconded that Mr. C. J. Wall be treasurer.—Carried.

Mr. Wall thought that they had appointed a very young man to take charge of the finances of the association, especially as the pic-nic just past was likely to be quite a financial success. He thought the treasurer would be able to take a month or two of holidays when all returns were in.

It was moved and seconded that the present secretary be retained.—Carried.

The remaining offices were filled as follows: Mr. W. H. Brauton, guard; Messrs. Jas. Wilson, W. H. McCutcheon, J. C. Trebilcock, finance committee; Messrs. P. McGlade, Jas. Fitzgerald, J. B. Murphy, directors; Messrs. J. Moule and R. W. Sharpe, auditors.

The secretary was requested to retire for a few minutes, and when asked to return again was informed by the president that as a token of appreciation for services rendered the pic-nic committee the association had decided to present him with $50.

It was moved and seconded that all drivers of grocers' rigs in the procession at the pic-nic (excepting those given prizes by the judges) get $1 each.—Carried.

After disposing of some other business of local interest, the meeting adjourned at 5.

The B. C., Commerce and Maritime Register says: The salmon run in the Fraser continues to be above the average. The canneries are busy; and notwithstanding all that is being said to the contrary, the pack this season will be a fair one Prices are likely to rule high, so that the operations of the season in all probability will be regarded as satisfactory—that is, if the canneries are satisfied with fair profits.

POINTS FOR CLERKS.

Perhaps some one may find a useful hint in the suggestions of Professor Wells of Ohio. "Have you ever stopped to calculate," he says, "how much of the spot of the American people is carried on by proxy? A thousand men and boys gather in God's sunshine, surrounded by His inspiring air, with the blood in their veins and the muscles of their bodies begging for a rough-and-tumble game with the elements; these thousand men and boys troop forth some summer day for sport. What is the sport? To sit on crowded, uncomfortable boards, breathing tobacco smoke, and eating peanuts, and howling, while eighteen men, some score of yards away, are doing their playing for them! Twenty thousand people to watch a game of base-ball! What a toughening must have come to those 20,000 set of muscles—through the eyes! How the blood must have been invigorated, and the brain cleared, and foul air driven from the lungs—through the eyes!

"People of the United States do a vast deal of playing by proxy. After a great game of base ball what large editions of our papers are sold, and how many hundreds of dandies, with cigarettes held in their nerveless hands that never felt a base ball bat in their flabby lives, spend their nickels to see whether the Chicagoes or Cincinnatis or Clevelands came out ahead! Better five hours with bat in hand, or speeding around the diamond, than a lifetime of newspaper reading about games played by others. Better a day's vigorous pull at the oars than attendance on all the regattas that ever were. Better a ten-mile walk on your own feet than the witnessing of all the O'Leary's and Westons that ever trod the sawdust path. Better a twenty mile spin on your own bicyle than all the programmes of all the fancy riders on this planet. Better a thousand fold the clumsiest activity of your own body and brain than the spectacle of the most proficient amusement mongers this lazy world ever paid to do its playing for it.

"Why, success now-a-days absolutely demands a healthy body. They used to make out of the sickly son a preacher or a college professor. The days are past when such a disposition was possible. The demands made now on men and women of all callings are so strenuous that invalid or a semi-invalid is drawn aside from the race almost before the word 'Go.' And health is impossible for any long time to any one who has not an abnormally strong constitution, without some active and cheerful sport.

"Success demands, too, besides health, push, vivacity, energy. No man can succeed in the most humble work without will power. Other ages have been ages of gold or iron or bronze; but this is the age of steam, and not merely of boiling water, but of what Paul calls 'boiling spirit;' 'feverent in spirit,' our translation reads. Cold-blooded men and women must fall to the rear. Men and women of ready adaptability, of quick and keen preceptions, of vim and vigor—the demand of our times has wrought out the needed supply of these.

Now the man who has forgotten how to play is a man half-asleep. He is in a semi-torpid condition. Sport, mirth, recreation, is absolutely neccessary to maintain an alert brain, a wide-awake set of powers.

"But most of all, success in these times requires a cheery and serene nature. You think that a queer statement, having doubtless in your mind some fussy, worrying rich man of your acquaintance. But none the less the statement is true, and I repeat it, that the men in any honorable calling who achieve a permanent, worthy success, are men who at regular and frequent intervals escape from the tension, the fume, the toil of their business, to make themselves, over fresh and new recreate themselves, that is, with hearty, innocent mirth. At a time when nervous disorders are becoming alarmingly prevalent, and sudden deaths of overworked men startingly frequent, material for the support of my declaration is sure to be plentiful within the circle of each man's acquaintance; and I have no doubt that your own experience and observation will show you that when other things are equal, it is always the man of equanaimity, of peaceful serenity, of a gay and mirthful temper, who bears life's stress most victoriously, and lasts the longest to accomplish the most."

HOW TO EXPEL WORMS FROM CURRANTS.

All grocers are aware that dried fruits are liable to become infested with small worms, even when great pains are taken to prevent their appearance, and many have probably been put to their wit's ends in attempting to fight the pests, after they had once gained possession. At the best, it is no easy matter to cope with the intruders, and a method of driving them from the fruit, which has been recommended by one having had experience may be acceptable to those troubled in a similar manner. By putting the infested fruit into a large pan and placing over a vessel of boiling water, the worms will sooner or latter become uncomfortably warm, when they will crawl to the surface. If strips of paper are then placed on the fruit, and a covering laid over all to exclude the light, the worms will crawl onto the strips of paper, which can then be thrown into the fire. Several hours may be required to get rid of the worms, the times being proportioned to the amount of fruit.—California Grocer.

Credit is often too cheap and overbubing far too common. Don't be guilty of the one, and don't abuse the other.

"One man ov genius in 97 thousand 4 hundred and 42 men of ordinary business talent, is just about the right proportion for actual business."—Josh Billings.

EARLY CLOSING.

The retail grocers of Minneapolis, will no longer keep open their stores half the night for the accommodation of customers, who could just as well make their purchases at a seasonable hour. We hope that the Minneapolis grocers', will maintain the commendable position they have taken in this respect and not allow a few malcontents to obstruct a movement so auspiciously inaugurated. In the matter of early closing it appears that in no department of business is the submission to popular will so complete as in the grocery business. When asked why he does not close his store at an early hour, the reply of the grocer is, in nine cases out of ten, that many of his customers defer trading until late in the evening, and that in order to retain their patronage he must accommodate them. In this city, late working hours for the grocer are the rule, the few exceptions being only found in those cases where the retailer is not dependent upon a strictly local trade. So long has this custom obtained that undoubtedly if early closing became general, the public would regard it in the light of an unwelcome innovation. Experience has shown that in large cities it is almost an impossibility to secure unity of action for the advancement of a cause that in so far as it pertains to the subject under discussion. There are always to be found tradesmen who imagine that much is to be gained by prolonging the work of the day far into the night, and they never fail to practically express their ideas. Let the public once understand that the grocer requires, in common with other representatives of the human race, a certain number of hours for rest and recreation, and there will be no difficulty in preserving the integrity of any compact in that direction that the grocers may choose to make. The housewife can, as a rule, lay in her stores as conveniently during the day as at nine o'clock in the evening, and, in truth, to better advantage, for she will then have not the attention of a tired out clerk, but of one who is courteous and obliging. The grocer cannot very well blame the clerk, who at half-past nine or ten o'clock in the evening, performs his duties in a perfunctory manner and crowds the limitations of discourtesy in his attitude toward the nocturnal customer. Tired out, body and soul, by twelve or fourteen hours of hard work, it is not surprising that neither the grocer or his clerk, when they do finally close up, fail to manifest any indication of a sweet or lovable disposition. They have no time in which to seek diversion. The unfortunate grocer has his nose placed on the grindstone by the public, and all because he has allowed himself to become the slave of a custom that is detrimental, to say the least, to his best interests. Cannot Philadelphia grocers follow the example of their Minneapolis brethren and bring about a reform in this matter. It cannot be accomplished in a week nor a month, but if the grocerymen take hold of the matter with a determination to make it one of the realities of the near future, they will, in the end, have the satisfaction of seeing their efforts rewarded.—Grocery World.

THE LEARNED GROCER.

"Mother wants a pound of dried currants," said a little girl who came into the learned grocer's store on Eighth avenue.

"I hain't got a dried currant in the store, and there hain't one in the city," replied the grocer. "But I know what you want, and I've got 'em." The learned grocer brought forth a box of the little, sticky, sugary, dried fruit, popularly known as dried currants, and used in fruit cake, plum puddings, mince pies, buns and the like.

"Why, them's 'em," said the little girl.

"Yes, them's 'em," assented the grocer; "and if the Grecian maiden who trod this particular lot of fruit into the package had used a little water on her feet before she began, there wouldn't be so much sand and grit in 'em as there is. She must have been having a regular hoe-down on the classic sands before she began to dance on this box of fruit. There, sissy, tell your mother she must bathe 'em in several waters before she uses 'em, or she might just as well put a lot of sandpaper in her fruit cake. And tell her they ain't dried currants, either."

"What's the reason they ain't dried currants?" asked a disputative customer

"They ain't dried currants any more than they're dried pumpkins!" replied the grocer "The reason they ain't dried currants is that they weren't currants before they were dried. That's reason enough, ain't it?"

"Yes," said the customer less disputative. "But what does everybody call 'em dried currants for?"

"'Cause they don't know any better!" replied the grocer. "They'll go right on coming in here and asking for dried currants just the same after I tell 'em why they ain't dried currants as they did before."

"What should they ask for then?" inquired the customer.

"If any man should ever come in here and ask for dried corinths," said the grocer, "he would not necessarily be a gentleman, but I'd bet on him for being a scholar. Dried corinths is what you should ask for when you want this little sugar-coated, gritty raisin for it's a raisin, pure and simple."

How's that?" the customer wanted to know.

"Because it was a grape before it was dried," said the grocer, "and if dried grapes ain't rasins, what are they?"

"But you said these were dried corinths!" said the customer. "What's a corinth, anyhow?"

"A corinth is the smallest grape that grows," said the grocer, "and it lost its name years and years ago, because it was gradually corrupted into currant, which became the name of the acidulated little berry of our garden, which you might dry until Gabriel sounds his horn without getting it any nearer the condition of a raisin than a pea is. This little grape grows all over the islands of the Grecian archipelago, and was first exported from Corinth, and that's what gave it its name. The bunches don't grow much bigger than a stem of red currants, and they are so full of sugar that when they are picked and dried in the sun they actually seem to melt and run together, and it takes a good deal of care and labor to separate them again. After they are separated is the time when the Grecian maiden gets her work in on them, for it is one of her pleasant duties to jump on a heap of the sticky fruit with her bare feet until she has compressed enough of the little raisins to pile three boxes into one. No hydraulic press could do it any better. If it could, we wouldn't have the sand and grit the maiden's feet mingle with the fruit, without which no dried corinths are genuine.

"Still, I shall expect folks to come in here and ask for dried currants just the same," said the learned grocer, as he went to wait on a new customer.—Sun.

EGGS.

We have good reasons to believe that the egg trade of a great many retail grocers in the cities is about on a par with their sugar department, so far as profit is concerned, the small margin between the trouble and selling price barely paying for the cost of handling the staple. There is decidedly something "rotten in Denmark" when retail profits on an article or series of articles have sunk so low that their sale is unremunerative and persisted in only because it is a convenience to customers, and in this case we believe the usual explanation will hold good, i.e., that quality has been sacrificed for some reason, probably in an effort to catch trade by holding out low prices as an inducement. We think this is a serious mistake with any food product like eggs, and butter which, if not good, must be actually worthless. There are many descriptions of groceries, which in point of quality, cover a wide range, yet the most inferior grades possess their merits, and a positive intrinsic value. It is different with eggs. A stale egg is an abomination, and there is but little leeway between the finest fresh-laid and the grade below which no prudent, experienced retailer cares to pass in selecting eggs. We believe it will pay grocers to give especial attention to the quality of the eggs which they handle, and to take pains to secure a grade that will invariably give satisfaction even though the price has to be marked up correspondingly. In other words, we believe that fine eggs at a good profit will sell more freely than poor or irregular stock at just about cost.

The neglect of retail grocers to "candle" eggs often leads to a loss of custom. A bad one will be found occasionally in packages of really good stock, and if left with the rest may disgust a good customer and provoke her to the point of transferring her trade to another store. "Candling" takes time and is perhaps unnecessary when absolutely fresh eggs are procured from a quarter beyond suspicion, but when the quality of an invoice is in the least degree doubtful, it should be rigorously practiced and the stale eggs removed.—Merchants' Review.

STYLE IN STORES.

St. Anthony successfully withstood many temptations of the devil, says an exchange, but the smile of a beautiful woman captivated him. From the time of Adam, the first man, to that of Adam Forepaugh, the showman, beauty has been man's greatest attraction. Millions of dollars are annually spent for things which are not needed, because they are beautiful and because of the enjoyable sense of possessing that which is lovely.

There was a time in the early development of this country when our forefathers considered it sinful to have anything in their homes not of a strictly useful character. Preachers in the pulpit denounced the vanity of wearing personal ornaments. Everything was prim, plain and unattractive in the matter of dress, and home decoration was an undiscovered art. Stores were gloomy places with narrow barred windows, which admitted but little light and less ventilation, and the exact quality and color of goods could only be ascertained by carrying them out of doors and examining them by sunlight. Show windows had not been invented. Goods were kept on unsightly shelves or packed away from sight in secluded drawers, and the housewife in making her selections had but little variety to choose from.

Now everything is changed. In nothing has greater progress been made than in the art of general storekeeping. We say art, because the display and disposition of goods has become an art with our modern storekeepers, an art that is capable of still higher developement.

A walk along the streets where the principal retail business is done in any of our leading Western towns is a constant series of surprises and pleasures. Goods of every conceivable kind and character from almost every part of the inhabitable globe are artistically displayed behind massive plate-glass windows. A tour of inspection of our leading retail establishments in Chicago is like a visit to a great exposition, where the products and skill of the most expert workmen in the world are displayed. Our merchants have learned the secret of successful merchandising by making their goods appear beautiful and attractive.

By displaying goods with appropriate and tasteful surroundings they gain a vast amount of custom that would not otherwise come to them. People in carelessly passing along the street are attracted by the beautiful things which are presented to their gaze and are induced often to purchase things they would not otherwise have thought of buying had they not been presented to their attention in this manner. If asked our candid opinion in the matter we would say that it pays to keep a stylish store. A store can be made to appear stylish without extravagant expenditure; good taste in the arrangement and display of goods; constant care of stock; a few mirrors and other adornments here and there in different parts of the store, skillfully arranged, give a greatly enlarged appearance to the place and reflect many things as the customer passes by them that would not otherwise be seen. In short, there are a thousand ways in which a storekeeper can make his place appear stylish and attractive, without a great expenditure of money, if he will bestow more care and thought upon this matter.

The exterior of the store should be kept neat as well as the interior. A bright, clean awning gives a pleasant effect. Its coolness is inviting to the passer-by. It protects the goods in the windows and those which are displayed upon the sidewalk in front of the store. The storekeeper should not allow it to become soiled or discolored, or at least should not allow it to remain there in a weather-beaten and filthy condition. It can be taken down and washed or replaced at little expense with a new one. The iron frame-work will last for many years if properly taken care of.

We believe in neat storekeeping. A reputation for neatness has made the fortune of many a retailer, and those engaged in the trade cannot remind their clerks and employes of this matter too often. We are convinced from long observation that style is a good thing in trade, though many tradesmen affect to despise it. Customers like to be seen and to have it known that they deal in the most stylish place in town, and they invariably experience a sense of mortification, if they are possessed of that petty pride so common to the human race, if anyone encounters them in the vicinity of a second-class establishment.

"Always keep up a good front. If you are down in the world never show it by your appearance if you want to do business. It is an axiom of human nature that people prefer to do business with successful people, or those who have the appearance, rather than with those who are behind hand." The above remarks are from a manufacturer who has risen from poverty to affluence, and they are worth keeping in one's memory. He said—"Not many years ago when I was very poor, not one of my customers ever knew it. I spent more money on them, and generally gave out the idea of my success. Had I not done this, but appeared poor and shabby, I would have lost my trade. There is no knowing how far the appearance of prosperity goes. Magnificent office, a busy place, the indication of wealth all impress a man, and he prefers to do business with you if you have the semblance of success, than with a seemingly poorer neighbor.—Irish Provision Merchant.

Cheese is as great a success this year in Hastings county as it was last, and the quantity produced greater. Within easy distance of Madoc village there are 15 factories that will average each 200,000 lbs., making a total of 3,000,000 lbs. of cheese, with a value, at 9 cents average, of $270,000. The county has nearly a hundred factories. The N. Hastings Lumber Manufacturing Company expects to turn out from 40,000 to 50,000 cheese boxes.

Mr. Herbert Galt, of G. H. & J. Galt, Vancouver, B.C., has returned by the Parthia after a three months' business trip to China. He was over to attend the market during the tea season, and spent most of his time in Foo Chow and Shanghai. He had an enjoyable trip, but is glad to get back again to Canada. Mr. Galt expects to take another trip across the Pacific next year.

Messrs. Armour and Cunningham have opened a new grocery store in Weatherhead's new block on King street east, Brockville. The store has been elegantly fitted up and is one of the most attractive in town. A stock of everything first class in the grocery line will be kept. The members of the firm are both well and favorably known and will no doubt receive a liberal share of patronage.

The finest display to be seen of indurated ware, made by the E. B. Eddy Company, of Hull, is in the large display window of Mr. R. Barron, of 728 Yonge street. He has piled his window full of this ware, and the assortment includes pails, tubs, milk pans, dish pans, wash-basins, handy dishes, barrel covers and various other articles of every-day household use. Owing to the fact that recently these goods had to be imported from the United States at a very high rate of duty, householders generally did not know much about the neatness, usefulness and economy of this ware. But since the Eddy Company has gone so largely into its manufacture and are pushing the business so thoroughly well through their Toronto branch, 29 Front street west, every grocery and a great many hardware and fancy goods dealers throughout the country find that it is imperative for them to keep a full line of these goods in stock.

SIMPLIFIED CUSTOMS ROUTINE.

The receipt by importers of sample parcels through express has for a long time been a source of trouble and complaint owing to the fact that before they could get these parcels it was necessary for them to go through all the formalities that are required to get valuable parcels out of the custom house. Collector Kilvert, of Hamilton, has been in communication with the department on the subject, and the result has been that a new regulation will be put into force as an experiment, and if it works well it will remain permanent.

Hereafter, importers receiving by express sample parcels of little value can get them simply by going to the customs warehouse and signing their names in a book kept there for the purpose of showing that they have received the parcels consigned to them. This simple formula will be observed when the sample parcels do not exceed $10 in value; all which are valued above that figure will be subject to the ordinary customs regulation.

Of course this new regulation does not affect the express company's regulations. Before a parcel is delivered by the customs authorities it will be necessary to get an order for it from the express company.

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, Aug 27, 1891.

GROCERIES.

Profound dulness is the ruling condition of the market. On the street it might almost be said that "All the air a solemn stillness holds" The lowest rate of activity at all events in the course of the whole year's trade is that of the current market. We are at the fag-end of one crop year and scarcely at the beginning of another, when all the money in the country is needed to pay the expenses of harvesting, and circulates only for pressing wants. Much of the harvest money is not spent until long after it is earned, as there is generally a desire to save as much of it as possible for a time of year when work is scarcer. The transition from summer to autumn though as dull this year as it ever is, is yet unaccompanied by so much murmuring against hard times as we are accustomed to hear. The excellent prospects that appear to lie in the near future are the basis of this better feeling.

CANNED GOODS.

The demand is still in reserve, Comparatively little buying suffices to keep consumption going, and there is probably too little ready money available for dealers to do much laying in of fall supplies. The abundance of seasonable fruit and vegetables obtainable in the natural state satisfies a considerable proportion of the consumption that at other seasons goes to the benefit of the canned goods trade. The canners have probably transferred the bulk of their pea pack to the jobbers, who in turn are distributing now what was contracted for early in the season. The ruling price for round assorted lots of peas, tomatoes and corn for fall delivery is $1.10, though offers have been made at $1.05. Peas in the usual retailers lots are $1.12½ to $1.20. New beans are in to sell at $1. There seems but one side to the question whether there will or will not be a large tomato crop and pack. Every indication favors the affirmative side of the question. There is no business of any moment in future tomatoes. One reason is that everything is too problematical yet, but the situation is supposed to favor late buyers. On the other hand jobbers do not invite retailers to bind them unconditionally to supply stock that is far from generally mature yet. New mackerel is arriving at $1.10 to $1.20. The prices are easier on account of the run this year having been liberal and the fish large. Business in future salmon is almost at a standstill. The canners have probably sold their output.

The B. C. Commercial Journal says:—The season on the Columbia river closed on the 10th, and definite information as to the pack has been received. The actual pack this season was 393,070 cases, while last season the pack was 432,300 cases, showing a shortage of nearly 40,000 cases. The canneries at River's Inlet and on the Skeena have closed for the season. It is estimated that the pack on the Skeena is about 70,000 cases. The run on the Fraser improved last week, and the canneries did very well, having increased the pack to 120,000 cases. Some of the canneries expect to fill all the cans that they have prepared although the indications are that the sockeye run is near an end. Shipments of fresh salmon to Montreal, Toronto and New York were heavy last week. The demand from the east is increasing, on account of the season on the east coast being nearly over. In England, the market is said to be steady, pending information as to the actual results of the season's pack. The bark Serica and the ship Blair Athole will shortly commence loading salmon at Victoria, and the Morayshire at New Westminster, all for the U. K.

The first shipment of new salmon, consisting of a carload of the Horse-shoe brand in tall and flat tins, reached this market on Tuesday. New flat tins contain only select cuts of the fish and are very fine. The price is $1.70 per doz., and for talls $1.45. The shipment was divided among the following houses: Eby, Blain & Co., Perkins, Ince & Co., J. W. Lang & Co., Warren Brothers & Boomer.

Tomatoes are reported to be ripening slowly. The price is much higher for raw stock than it was towards the end of last August. A year ago they were 60c. a bushel, now they are about $1.

COFFEE.

The inquiry for coffee does not mend. A mild rate of activity is kept up, but the features of the market remain identically what they were some time ago. The finest grades continue to be rather scarce. Prices are steady and unchanged.

DRIED FRUIT.

The business in spot goods is fairly good. There appears to be a considerable stock of low grade Valencias yet, as prices are as lax as ever, quoting at 4 to 5c. The new crop will probably arrive before all the old is cleared off. Currants are steady and going out rather quietly at quotations now current for some time. Prunes are dull from 6½c. upwards. The first shipment of new Valencias was made last week, as was that of new Patras currants. The market for both opened pretty much on a par with prices of a year ago. New figs open much lower this year than they did last year. The largeness of the currant crop is this year counterbalanced, in its tendency to cause easy prices, by the largeness of the French demand and the fact that rot is said to be affecting the fruit.

P. L. Mason & Co., in a recent circular say:

Valencia raisins—Bordehore & Co., write: "The nearer we approach harvest time the appearance of the vines points more and more every day to a diminution in the calculations made as to the size of crop, and it is now estimated that outturn will be nothing like last year's, nor in any way approach it. Malaga fruit—Mr. Casado writes, July 31, 1891:—"The raisin crop is expected to yield only 500,000 boxes, and progresses in very good condition. The cutting of the grapes will begin by August 20. So far quality of grapes is fair. Figs—The crop is good, and if we do not have adverse weather during harvesting you can depend on fair quality and low prices." Currants—Bariff & Co. write, July 31: "There have been some complaints lately of damage by rot, but we do not think the damage till now is of any consequence. Should it continue, however, we may have considerable damage to quality. Shipments about August 25. Cutting only commences to-day." Prunes—Messrs. J. and W. Liebman & Co, write us that their advices are all favorable as regards quality and quantity of the Bosnia crop. They anticipate moderate prices.

Another drop has taken place in Valencia raisins. The best off stalk now on the market is quoted at 4¾ to 5c. Private cable advices from Denia on Tuesday say that the new crop is considerably shorter than it was supposed to be.

RICE AND SPICES.

Rice is selling quite as freely now as at any time of year. The one difficulty is the scarcity of high grades. Japan is now in and selling at 5 to 5¼c. Pickling operations are creating a demand for spices, which consequently are selling better than they commonly do, though the prices of them are unaffected.

SUGAR.

The present state of trade in granulated shows a very marked relapse from that which practically monopolized market attention three weeks ago. Then it was impossible to meet the demand with enough sugar, now it is impossible to rouse the demand to the most ordinary state of activity. Granulated sugar is now nearly as slow a line as any other on the market. It is unchanged in quotation, being yet 5c. for quantities of not less than 15 barrels, and 5⅛c. for smaller quantities. Yellows are very quiet at from 3¾c. upwards, the bottom price being for a very dark sugar. Raws quote from 3½c., a very dark Trinidad being procurable at that price. Barbados is 3⅞c. and Demerara 4⅜ to 4½c. The trade in raws is about on a par with that in refined. Prices would probably stiffen if a better demand existed, as an advance of ¼c. took place on Saturday in the New York market.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

No business in syrups comes in for special remark. Small purchases and few of them are the order of the day. All the stock on the spot or available at the refineries consists of bright grades only. Molasses does not improve in the demand. Some has been offering, but has created little interest among jobbers.

TEAS.

Business in teas has rather dragged so far this season in the process of transferring stock from brokers to second hands. Prices have ruled lower than usual. Chinese, Japan, Indian and Ceylon teas of the new crop are offering freely. Retailers, however, are not contributing a very strong element to the demand side of the market, and this makes business go slower between importers and jobbers. New season's Japans as low as 16c. are here. The business done in Indian teas has been fairly good, especially for country orders. From London we see that with a general improvement in the quality of Indian Teas the demand has strengthened considerably, and a larger trade has been done at higher prices for good to fine kinds, but poor liquoring lots are cheaper. The Wednesday sales will be resumed next week. Ceylon Teas were mostly of inferior cup, and the sales resulted in some very low quotations. The exports of tea from Great Britain illustrate a satisfactory increase in the use of British grown teas in markets. The exports of Indian and Ceylon teas are relatively for June and July, 7 per cent, and 9 per cent, as compared with 5 per cent, and 4 per cent, during the same months last year, and the difference is recounted for by a corresponding shrinkage in the export of China tea.

The shipment of Young Hysons received by Perkins. Ince & Co. sells at prices ranging from 17 to 45c. and the drawing quality shows good value. All the low priced teas were sold before they arrived, and without samples, so strong was the demand which awaited new Young Hyson teas of low grade.

PETROLEUM.

Local business is improving. Prices, however are stationary.

The Petrolia Advertiser reports: Petrolia Crude $1.34½ per bbl., Oil Springs crude $1.34½ per bbl. This being the dullest season of the year for the refined trade, an excellent opportunity is now offered to the refining interest of absorbing surplus stocks of crude. This opportunity, though, does not seem to be readily taken advantage of, by the majority of the refiners, as, with but two exceptions their stocks of the raw material are pretty well kept up by the individual stockholders in the various interests, being large producers. They claim that the price of crude is too high as compared with that they get for refined, to warrant any speculative market. There is one thing certain that the producers are playing right into the manufacturer's hands by the continual run of the drill. There are actually being finished over one hundred new wells per month throughout this oil region. As quite a large refining capacity has been added to the several refineries since last fall's trade, it is obvious that a control of the crude stock, will give to the interest holding such control, a large command of the trade—a leverage by the way the refiners have nearly always managed to obtain, and can easily be done by the producers drilling for an increased production, causing the crude market to be uncertain and speculative. The conjectural question, which must as the fall approaches, be what is probably the actual supply of crude in Petrolia? It will be to the interest of the producer to endeavor to create the impression that there is not enough "to go around," but it is equally to the advantage of those who need stocks and have not got them that there should be a suspicion of existence of hoarded stores, which may be opportunely thrown upon the market when the proper time comes, to demoralize the market. All such conjecture may be set down as purely speculative. The price of crude oil on to-day's exchange was firm at $1.34½. Refined is quoted at 12½ to 13c. in barrels, and 9½c. in tank cars, f.o.b. here, less two per cent off for cash.

DRUGS AND CHEMICALS.

The trade in drugs has not varied perceptibly from its ordinary course. The demand is but moderate in staples, while special hot weather lines have not been in average request. Prices are steady at last quotations.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

Butter sells readily if the quality is good, at 14 to 15c., with a shade higher for unexceptionable stock. The week's receipts have been about according to the average for this and the preceding month. Internal consumption is the sole sustaining influence. Export business has not got started yet. There are signs, however, that when it does commence it will be on a fair price basis. In the United States prices have risen on the grades that have been the chief competitor of Canadian for an export market. Elgin creamery, which was offered, from Chicago, to be laid down here at prices considerably under our own creamery, and which there was some business in to store in bond for export, has advanced 3c. recently. Also, buyers here are not loath to carry good stock if they can get round lots of it at 14c. One dealer bought 200 tubs of choice a few days ago at that figure. Another offered 13½c. for a 135 tub lot. Two local buyers have a considerable quantity in store for autumn export, one of them holding 1,200 tubs, the other probably more. For creamery tub there is no demand yet.

Cheese advanced a few days ago to 9½c. at the factories, and though some houses which bought before the advance are quoting as low as that to retailers, yet 10c. is the generally current price.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

BEANS—Are in small volume and firm at $1.70 to $1.80.

DRIED APPLES—Are nominal at 7½ to 8½c. A few barrels turned up the other day and changed hands at the former figure.

EVAPORATED APPLES—Are in stock but not in demand at 13½ to 14c.

EGGS—Are plentiful at 11½ to 12½c. Consumers are still lacking. Some of the stock is said to be in bad condition. Country buyers are accused of shipping the small eggs to this market to make up good selections for the English market.

HAY—Receipts are still ample at $11 to $12 The lower figure appears to be the one that rules. Both old and new timothy is freely offering. Outside buyers are making inquiry previous to pressing.

HIDES—Are steady at 5 to 5½c. for No. 1 green, and 6½c. for cured.

The Best Grocers Make a point of Keeping it always in Stock.

MARKETS—Continued.

HONEY—Is as dull as ever at 7 to 10c. for clear, and 14 to 16c. for comb.

HOPS—Are steady and in small compass at 33 to 35c.

POTATOES—Show no falling off in the supply nor strengthening of the price, 75c. to $1.

SKINS—Sheepskins are 55c.

STRAW—Is scarce at $6 to $7.

WOOL—Does not improve at 18 to 19c.

FISH.

There is very little doing in the fish market. Prices are as they quoted last week, viz., 6½ to 7c. for whitefish, salmon trout and pickerel, and $1 75 to $2 for lake herring. A revival in the trade is looked for when the exhibition opens.

GREEN FRUIT.

The business in green fruit has not been appreciably more active this week than it was last week. Oranges move quietly into consumption. Jamacias are here at $8.50, but they are not well into the market yet. There are some Valencias at $6.50, and Sorrentos are unchanged at $4.50. Lemons shot up in New York under the influence of the hot spell and the prospect of probable scarcity before new fruit comes in in November. Both Palermos and Messinas are $5 here. Bananas are unchanged at $1.20 to $1.50.

SMALL FRUITS, ETC.

California plums are yet in stock, but are declining in rate of supply in the face of incoming home fruit. They remain at $2.25. Canadian plums are coming in at the following prices : blues 75c., Lombards and Imperial gauges are $1. No Canadian freestone peaches are yet at the market. Clingstones are 75c., Delaware freestones are $1.50 per half bushel basket. California Bartlett pears are 3.50 in cases and kegs. Canadian Bartletts are arriving, green, at $6 to $6.50 per barrel. Apples are superabundant at 75c. to $1.25 per barrel. Lawtonberries are nearly out at 10c.

PROVISIONS.

The provision trade of the week has been one of direct movement towards the consumer. There has been no pause on the route to change hands in a speculative way. Car lots are now the exception, the scarcity of stock disposing holders, and the stiffness of prices disposing speculative buyers to take less interest in round lots. Consequenly immediate consumption affords the present firm bottom to the market.

BACON—Long clear is very firm at 8½c. Smoked bellies are 10½ to 11c., backs 11c. rolls 9c.

HAMS—are immovably firm at 12½ to 13c. for smoked, and 11 to 11½c. for pickled.

LARD—is 10¼c in tubs and 10¾c. in pails for pure, which is scarcely obtainable now. Compound is 8½ to 9c.

MESS PORK—United States is jobbing out at $15. There is virtually no Canadian heavy, though $15.50 is still quoted. Canadian short cut is $16 to $17.

SALT.

The market is active at unchanged prices. The following sales were made by the Toronto Salt Works, on Tuesday : 4 cars of barrels at $1.20, 1 car of dairy at $1.25, 3 cars of sacks at 68c.

DRY GOODS.

The outlook brightens with the advance of August. Reports from the road are much better than they were. A good many traders have been in the city recently. Payments are no better than they usually are at this time of year.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Aug 27, 1891.

There is no particular change to note in groceries or other similar branches, and actual business at the moment is small, but the indications for the fall trade continues favorable. In sugar there is a quiet feelng, but buyers are only taking their breath, so to speak, and farther demand is anticipated. Orders to arrive in dried fruit show a somewhat higher level on Valencia rasins, but currants have no business as yet. In provisions, etc., there is no change to note, the market generally maintaining values steady.

SUGAR AND SYRUP.

The continued demand that has been noted from week to week has pretty well filled wants for the present, and the market has a quiet feeling, but there is no change in prices. Yellows rule at 3⅝ to 4⅜c., and granulated 4⅝c. Raw sugars remain about the same, and there are a few lots offering here from first hands at 3¾ to 4c.

MOLASSES.

The market is very quiet, but there is not much offering here just at present. Four or five cargoes are reported on the way, however, and some have been received since our last, a sale being advertised for Friday. Barbadoes is quoted nominally at 38c., but this would, probably, be cut on for 200 puncheon lots.

TEAS.

There has been a fairly active tea market, all arrivals being picked up. Since our last some 2,000 odd packages of Japans have changed hands 15 to 20c. There is very little doing in blacks.

COFFEES AND SPICES.

There has been a fair enquiry for coffee since our last, and some round lots of Jamaica have changed hands at 20 to 21½c. Spices continue dull with little doing.

RICE.

There is a fair demand for rice and prices remain steady. We quote :—Patna, $4.50 to $5; choice, $4.25 to $4.50; standard, $3.90 and off-grades $3.50 in car lots.

DRIED FRUIT.

The market does not present any very new features, but the indications are for a good opening for the fall trade. Old stock is pretty well reduced here, and there is not much doing in it at present. Valencias remain at 4 to 4¼ ex store, but if the reports about damage to the new crops, show that matters are really dangerous it is possible that there will be a stiffening on this figure. First shipments of new crop Valencias are due in Liverpool, to-day, and may possibly be in time for Fridays steamers for the St. Lawerence, in which case they ought to be here in eight days or so. Latest quotations on them are 21s. 6d. which is about equal to 7⅛c. here. There has been some fair orders to arrive booked on this basis. In currants there is no particular business to note in old stock, which rules steady at 5⅞, with supply light. First shipments from primary markets are now being made. They represent a basis of 17s. to 17s. 6d. f. o. b. and will be here toward the end of September. These figures mean about 5¾c. as an inside, but buyers are not disposed to operate in them yet, and we have heard of no business being done to arrive.

GREEN FRUIT.

There is no change in staple lines of green fruit and there is only a small jobbing business to note. Lemons rule steady at $3.50 to $4 per box and oranges $3.50 to $4.50.

FRESH GREEN FRUIT.

The market although well supplied has been kept pretty well cleared up but apples are a large offering and easy in consequence. $1 to $1.50 per barrel. Plums rule from 75c. to $1, and peaches 75c. to $1.25 per basket. Bartlett pears in kegs $1.50 to $2 and in barrels $4 to $5. Clapp favorite pears in kegs $1.50 and in barrels $3 to $4. Blue grapes sell at 7 to 9c. per lb. and watermelons 20 to 25c. each.

CANNED GOODS.

The local demand is small, buyers generally holding off for this season's pack. There is no material change in prices but some may occur in the course of a week or so. Fruits show an unmistakably easy tendency and contracts for tomatoes have been made at $1.

EGGS.

Receipts of eggs are much heavier, western dealers consigning freely. The market, therefore, is rather overstocked, but prices remain 12¼ to 12½c. for ordinary, and 13 to 13½c. for candled.

BUTTER.

The butter market remains dull and except in the matter of supplying local wants the values in this connection being no guide as to report possibilities. Holders apparently are beginning to be anxious about accumulating stocks, and are offering most freely, stating their willingness to accept prices that they could not possibly listen to a fortnight ago. Finest creamery 19 to 19 1-2c., finest townships 16 to 17c., finest western 13 1-2 to 14 1-2c.

CHEESE.

The market has a quiet, steady aspect, but although that exceeding hunger for cheese that there was a fortnight ago is not noticeable, there is no desire to pass by August stock at an acceptable figure. Shippers still complain, however, of unsatisfactory limits and narrow margin for business, but there is a quiet sort of business being put through for all that, though the basis is close and the English market is slow about following the advance here. Still prices are rather stiff, and the majority incline to the opinion that it would be unwise to force them higher. The factorymen, who seem to have pretty high ideas of the value of their Augusts, can bear this in mind. Based on prices in the country it would cost 9¾ to 9⅞c. and better to turn over finest Brockville stock, and shippers claim they have no bids to permit such. For States and Eastern makes 9½c. is certainly an inside, and they are held for more than that, for 9⅝c. has been paid for French country make. Finest Brockville stock, 9¾ to 9⅞c.; Finest Eastern and States, 9½ to 9¾c.; fine, 9 to 9¼c.; medium, 8½ to 8⅞c.; cable, 46s.

PROVISIONS.

The demand for provisions is a trifle improved, but the volume of business is still very small, and prices are about the same. Canadian short cut, per barrel is quoted at $17.00 to $17.25; mess pork, western, per barrel $15.25 to $15.75; short cut, western, per brl $17.00 to $17.25; hams, city cured, per pound 10½ to 11½c.; hams, canvassed, per lb 0 00 to 0 00c.; lard, Canadian, in pails, 8¾ to 9c.; bacon, per pound, 9 to 10c.; lard, com., refined, per lb, 7¾ to 8c.

GRAIN.

There is only a small jobbing business doing in grain. The stocks in store compared with those of a week ago show an increase of 678 bushels of wheat, 3,963 bushels of corn, 3,269 bushels of rye and a decrease of 13,500 bushels of peas, 8,784 bushels of oats, 2,093 bushels of barley. Compared with a year ago there is an increase of 166-268 bushels of wheat 3,030 bushelss of rye and a decrease of 28,476 bushels of corn, 37,225 bushels of peas, 10,806 bushels of oats, 19,254 bushels of barley. We quote:—No. 1 hard Manitoba, $0.00; No. 2 do. $1.05 to $1.07; No. 3 do., 97c; No. 2 Northern, 96 to 97; feed do., 70c; peas 87c. per 66 pounds in store; 88c. afloat; Manitoba oats; 37c. HALIFAX MARKET QUOTATIONS.

(Wholesale Selling Rates.)

HALIFAX, Aug. 26, 1891.

BREADSTUFFS.—There has been a decided change since our last, and wheat is up equal to an advance of 25c., and 30c. a barrel on flour. The idea of lower flour is now a thing of the past, for this year, as Europe can take three times as much surplus wheat as can be estimated in the world to date.

Manitoba highest grade patents, $5.50 to 5.75; High grade patents, $5.25 to 5.30; Good 90 per cent Patents, $5.10 to 5.20; Straight grade, $4.90 to 5.00; Superior extras, $4.75 to 4.85; Good seconds, $4.40 to 4.50; Graham flour, $4.90 to 5.10; Rolled $5.50; Middlings, $27.50 to $28.50; Split Peas $4.40 to $4.50; Pot Barley, $3.90 to $4.10.

SUGAR.—In refined sugar a good bright business is still in progress, chiefly in executing previous orders.

Cut loaf, 5½c.; Granulated, 4⅝ to 3¾.; Circle A, 4½c.; White extra C, 4¼c.; Standard, 3⅞c. to 4c.; Extra yellow C, 3¾c.; Yellow C, 3⅝c. to 3¾c.

MOLASSES.—Barbados, 40c.; Demerara, 35 to 38c.; Diamond N. 48c.; Porto Rico, 37 to 38c.; Trinidad, 34 to 35c.; Antigua, 34 to 35.

FISH.—There is nothing of interest to relate in this line since our last report.

ST. JOHN, N. B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N.B., Aug. 26, 1891.

About the only changes to note in the grocery trade are the lowering of prices in sugars and molasses, and the stronger tone of flour and corn meal.

FLOUR—There has been a good steady demand for flour the past week, and as the stock of old wheat is growing smaller the price is very firm with indications for a slight advance. Some are now asking 10c. per barrel higher than when last quoted. Manitoba is quoted $6 to $6.10, high grade family $5.55 to $5.65, medium patent $5.25 to $5.35.

MEAL—Cornmeal has taken quite a sharp upward turn, with a good demand. Whereas last week our millers were asking $3.30 to $3.35, they now want $3.45 to $3.50, and do not seem anxious to sell at those figures.

SUGAR—The demand for sugar is not as great as some two weeks ago, and the refiners have been offering quite freely at lower prices than for some time. Granulated is quoted at 4½ to 4⅝c., yellows $3.60 to $3.85.

MOLASSES—Is without any change.

POTATOES—The market has been very unsteady. Last week the price was $1.30 to $1.45, and this 80c. to $1 with plenty offering for all demands.

BUTTER—The quality of butter has been below what is usually offered at this season. A choice article is readily disposed of at 18c.

EGGS—There has been a good trade done in eggs lately. The price keeps steady, 10 to 11c.

FEED—Keeps high. It is quoted at $27 to $28 per ton.

OATS—Are 56 to 57c. per bushel.

FISH—Dry cod are in good demand. Large are $4.40 to $5.50, mediums $3.50 to $3.65, pollock $1.50 to $1.75, pickled herring, bay, $1.50 to $1.60 per half bbl., Canso $3 to $3.25 per half bbl., shad $5.

NOTES.

The seven o'clock closing movement is spreading. The grocers of North End have voted in favor of it, and now we hear of a like movement among the grocers of the West End. As all say, the grocerymen have been working too long hours. It only requires a little energetic pushing among the grocers of the city to get them to fall in line also.

Daniel Gunn, grocer, Inglis street, Truro, N. S., has a book of very ancient date. The following is the inscription on the fly leaf; "A practical Exposition of the Ten Commandments by the learned labors and faithful servant of Jesus Christ, James Durham, late minister of Glasgow. Printed by Robert Sanders at Glasgow, Scotland, in 1675." The book was brought to this country by Mrs. Gunn's uncle, George McKenzie. The typographical make up of the book is peculiar to that age when the present small "f" did duty as the "s" of to-day. Mr. and Mrs. Gunn are also the possessors of a china service, and a book on Freemasonery nearly 100 years old.

Every line of goods embodies a history and a cience worth years of study to understand.

The trader who pays his way must sell at a profit, and cannot afford to cut below others in the same line.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN STOREKEEPING CONTRASTED.

American storekeepers who have not been abroad, have small conception of the advantages they enjoy in this country over those possessed by their confreres on the continent, if indeed it may be said that the foreign storekeeper enjoys any advantages or conveniences of trade at all.

To begin with the retailer in Europe has almost no social recognition by his fellow men, for while the wholesaler enjoys a certain degree of popular regard such as is usually shared by commoners, the small storekeeper, especially the dealer in interior towns and villages, is considered a very commonplace sort or a person indeed. To the English storekeeper this is more or less of a blow for he craves social recognition, which is there a sort of a standard of excellence, in theory at least. In attendance upon his customers behind the counter he is most obsequious in his manner, but with all his unbending and humility, he is only tolerated and upon his own premises, for the gentry accord him not even a nod of recognition beyond those confines, unless it be a patronizing glance or something of the sort in church or at some public meeting, when it is the "custom of the higher orders" to be more than ordinarily affable to the lower.

Of course no self respecting, public spirited American would tolerate such an attempt to remand him to the rear socially. In word and manner, he would make very robust assertion of his undoubted right to take his place among the best of the land. He would not demean himself to solicit or retain the trade of any patron who accorded him less than a reasonable degree of social recognition. On the contrary, he would speedily take means to inform the latter that they were placed upon a plane of strict equality, that the storekeeper asked no more and would be satisfied with no less. He would find it impossible to conceive of a man behind the counter humbling himself after the manner of an English shopman, but of the two he would be the more courteous and polite to those who understand and are capable of appreciating true courtesy and politeness.

As regards the conveniences of trade, an old storekeeper recently returned from a tour of the European continent, and a very observant one, says that dealers in this country are so far in advance of those in Europe that the latter can scarcely form an idea of the trade progress with which they are unacquainted. Our methods are new, theirs were discarded here more than a century ago. Whatever they have that is all new is borrowed or imitated from American methods and wares. But in many places on the continent, they appear to retain old methods as a matter of choice. In the hardware line, for instance, you ask for a package of tacks and the shopkeeper does not know what you mean. You endeavor to explain and then he takes a loose handiful or two of tacks, weighs them out and wraps them up in a sort of an old-fashioned horn of plenty, hurriedly made out of paper, such as our butchers use, and which is also still used by that trade over there, for it hasn't yet learned the convenience of wooden platters. A handsome penknife would be wrapped in the same sort of paper, for cartoons or convenient little packing boxes seem to be unknown on the continent, though used to some extent in London. The chances are, however, that the London shopkeeper would want the inevitable tuppence extra for the box, if the purchaser desired to carry it away. In fact it would appear to be a custom there to keep case goods only long enough in their cases to show them and in the event that the case is wanted the purchasers must pay a round sum for it in addition to the price of the wares. In case he does not the chances are that the goods will be wrapped up in last week's paper, may be not over clean at that. The conveniences of systematic departments are so wanting in some of the bazaars or stores in larger cities as leave it simply a marvel to the visitor to imagine how they get along at all. The country store is simply a place of barter, with little pretence to any sort of conveniences. Thither the gentry usually send their servants to make purchases, rarely appearing in person at any but the larger stores in the cities. An American storekeeper could scarcely overcome all the obstacles to the orderly conduct of business to be found upon the other side, and would not want to.—Ex.

Ice your CAKE in 3 minutes with GIBSON'S Icina. No Eggs required.

For one man to follow in another's footsteps is to pay him a great compliment. For one manufacturer to infringe upon or imitate the products of a rival, is not only the sincerest form of flattery, but a practical acknowledgement that he is deficient in those finer feelings of commercial honor which help to make business life endurable.

GIBSON'S "Icina" (formerly known as Dr. Clarke's Prepared Cake and Pastry Icings) is the original and only genuine preparation, and the favor with which it has been received by the public has had the usual effect of inducing others to endeavor to profit by its popularity. Insist upon getting GIBSON'S ICINA, the only genuine article made for the instantaneous icing of cakes and pastry.

Put up in 1 lb. and ½ lb. packets, 2 doz. in a case, in either Chocalate, Pink, or White ; any kind separate or assorted. See Price List page 25.

The following warning from the St. Louis Grocer may be of value to merchants: "Look out for a brand of salmon purporting to be put out by the 'Westport Packing Company,' of Westport Oregon. There is no such canning company, and the stuff in the can which came under our observation, would disgust a srarving vulture. Who is responsible for this outrage we do not know. but we hope the guilty party will be exposed. It is such stuff as this that is killing the trade in canned salmon."

AN EASY METHOD OF BECOMING RICH.

Andrew Jackson's Tennessee friend who, according to "Old Hickory's" statement to James Buchanan, "made a large fortune by minding his own business," offers an example of a method of successful accumulation which deserves more general imitation. It is not to be supposed, of course, that the Tennessee capitalist who was so indifferent to other folk's affairs had no other talents; he was, we dare say, a sharp, shrewd man of business. This business, we are justified in believing, grew to such an extent as to become the marvel of the neighborhood and even attracted the attention of the President of the United States. Few men of business who make it their policy to push their own trade and let their neighbor's affairs alone can expect their virtues to becomc a matter of historical record, as have those of the reticent Tennessean, but that they will thereby in a majority of cases; at least, attain prosperity, there can be little question. The chief object, no doubt, the merchant has in view who devotes much of his time to prying into the affairs of his competitors in trade, is to secure points to be used to the supposed disadvantage of the latter with customers and friends. We have known of such whose satisfaction in finding out a bit of scandal to be used in this manner was greater than that felt in selling a good bill of goods. Such men make the mistake of supposing that throwing mud at a rival builds up their own business at his expense, when in fact, the result is always just the reverse. The social reformer who is widely traduced soon becomes famous and finds abuse the best aid to success. So the business man whose rivals make him the object of special attention and unfavorable comment may safely regard this not only as a confession of their failure, but as a tribute to the abilities of their more successful competitor. — S. F. Country Merchant.

OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC ANALYST,

MONTREAL, September 9th, 1887.

To the Canada Sugar Refining Co., Montreal:

GENTLEMEN,—I have personally taken samples from a large stock of your Granulated Sugar, "REDPATH" brand, and carefully tested them by the Polariscope, and I find these samples to be as near to absolute purity as can be obtained by any process of Sugar-Refining.

The test by the Polariscope showed in yesterday s yield 99·90 per cent. of Pure Cane Sugar, which may be considered commercially as ABSOLUTELY PURE SUGAR.

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER issued weekly, subscription price $2.00 per year.

WHY

Do 75 per cent. of our Canadian Canners buy their labels and other lithographic work from

The Sabiston Litho. & Pub. Co.?

BECAUSE They have the largest corps of skilled Artists in the country.

BECAUSE They have the best machinery.

BECAUSE Their equipment is more complete than any other Litho. house in the country, and

BECAUSE They turn out the most satisfactory work.

This Company occupies 4 flats of the GAZETTE building, in Montreal, equal to a floo space of 35,000 square feet.

The business was commenced a little over 3 years ago by A. Sabiston and from the smallest establishment at that time has grown within the above period to be the largest of its kind in the country. This fact speaks for itself.

Before placing your orders for lithographic work, see what

The Sabiston Litho. & Pub. Co.

can do for you. Address all communications to

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

Now that the country is blessed with an abundant yield, it is to be hoped that the farmers will not follow any obstructive tactics, to delay that circulation whose mainspring is in the produce stored or being stored in their barns. They have the grain, they need the money, and the palms of their creditors, the country merchants' are itching to handle some of it. The crop has done its part, and now the farmers ought to do theirs. The policy of hanging back to wait for better prices they have tried again and again, though not with general satisfaction, and they may do it again. Thus they may put brakes on the business that the country is naturally prepared for. The reaping is assured but the marketing is not.

* * * *

The country merchant cannot but look on with exasperation at good market prices melting away, while the local farmers are idly holding on for an advance. On the verge of the McKinley Act's coming into force last October there was a general rush of barley to the border, but there were not wanting farmers who missed that tide of the market merely through waiting for it to rise a cent or two higher. When they have a good thing they are prone to wait for a better. Like the Indian, too much, with them, is enough. There are times when holding is warranted, when it is not a matter of pure chance, but the prompting of clear insight into the situation. This, however, only the few possess, and it is more like the gift of divination than business sagacity.

* * * *

After the country merchant has carried a dozen or more farmers all year, he naturally becomes impatient with the complaisant way those customers have of leaving him out of the question when the time for selling their grain comes. If prices do not suit them, and seldom the opening prices do, they will wait with the utmost calmness until prices have to suit. The country store continues to be their commissariat, and the merchant may make what shifts he can to pay old debts and buy new goods without their money. Instead of a bright spell of fall trade he has to lengthen out a little longer his experience of "niggering it through."

* * * *

The country merchant would probably be neither better nor worse off than he is to-day, if, instead of selling all his goods at a price to his farmer-customer, he entered into a grub-stake contract with the latter, agreeing to clothe and feed the farmer and his family for half the farmer's crop. And though luckless prospectors have often eaten the settler out of house and home under a grub-stake contract, yet they have more frequently raised him to affluence than the farmers have done the country merchants. Many a rural trader has gone to the wall, not because his assets did not balance his liabilities, but because too great a proportion of the assets were book-debts against farmers, and so not immediately or not completely convertible into money. Farmers' debts are a sufficient mill-stone round the trader's neck without the addition of postponed marketing when the market is good.

* * * *

If everything goes well, there ought to be an increase in business, not only temporarily but throughout the year. This fall ought to place many farmers in a better position. It should enable mortgages to be raised, machinery to be paid for, old accounts to be settled, etc. If it does there will be less to hamper the farmer and keep down his living wants to a low point. Thus he ought to be a better customer throughout the year. The fact that his consumptive capacity has been kept within narrower bounds by harder times in the past ought itself to beget a reaction in favor of the trader.

* * * *

Of the money obtained from the sale of farm products in the fall, the country merchant has often to be thankful if he gets only what is owing him on account. When the farmers have plenty of money they do not as a rule bring it to him. They go to the town or city where prices are cut and with their ready cash they get bargains. They have little use for their creditor when cash abounds. He supplies them with what they need when they have no money, and the close urban seller supplies them when they have. The country merchant should therefore have good interest on the capital that is locked up in the farmhouses from autumn to autumn. His prices ought to be such as will enable him to recoup himself for the long use of his money his credit customers have had. Thus he will to some extent even up the drawback of long and large credit with fair prices. There is no reason why he should lose profit as well as interest. If he does not look after these maters and tax his credit customers for them, he will find that his cash customers, who supply the mobile capital necessary to keep business going on, are really carrying the credit customers.

SACCHARINE PURITY.

Another bulletin, submitting the results of an investigation into the purity of the sugars, syrups and molasses consumed in this country, has been issued from the laboratory of the Inland Revenue Department. It contains the report of Mr. F. W. Babington, F.I.C., assistant to the Chief Analyst, upon 100 samples which had been subjected to a second and very minute examination. These samples were taken from a large number that had been collected in the Maritime Provinces, Quebec and Ontario, and been examined by the district analysts. It is very satisfactory to the public and the trade, and must be gratifying to the refiners, to have an assurance so well supported as Mr. Babington's report, of the purity of our sugars. The methods applied for testing the samples were evidently of the most rigid sort, and it speaks well for the quality of our sugars that they stood the ordeal so well. In his prefatory letter the chief analyst says: "The percentages of cane sugar contained in the white or granulated class vary from 98.84 to 99.8; the average is 98.26. There is no adulteration, and indeed, as has been remarked before now, these sugars are probably among the purest food substances in commerce."

This shows that our granulated sugars are practically, and all but absolutely, free of any but saccharine constituents. The yellow or brown sugars yielded an average of 90.23 of cane sugar, which shows they also possess a high degree of purity. It is clear that we may complacently fold our hands upon the matter of the comparative sweetness of our sugar, and be thankful we are not as other nations are. Most people were ready to be told that the saccharine element in the yellow sugar of commerce was highly diluted, particularly in the lower grades. It is to the credit of the sugar-making industry of the country that most people would be wrong. No adulteration was detected in sugar.

Thirty-one samples of molasses and twenty-six of syrups were examined, and in the latter only was any adulterant found. Three samples were shown to be genuine, starch glucose having been detected in them. One of these three specimens became semi-solid on keeping, while the other two counterfeited the genuine article well, both with respect to taste and appearance.

With reference to the terms "molasses" and "syrups," Mr. McFarlane says: "It would, however, be of advantage, both in trade and technology, if these terms were always used more in accordance with their original signification. If this were done, then it might be possible to restrict the term molasses to the drainings from raw sugar as produced from sugar cane in tropical countries. The word 'treacle' was originally used to signify the thicker product which drains from refined sugar in the moulds used in the same localities. It seems now to be almost obsolete in this country, and possibly even in the tropics it is being replaced by the word 'syrup.' It is not unlikely, for instance, that the grade known as 'Barbadoes syrup' may be equivalent to what was formerly known as 'treacle.' 'Syrup' in pharmacy means an aqueous solution containing about 66.7 per cent. of pure cane sugar, and the word might in commerce be restricted to the high-grade products of the refineries of the consuming country. As now used, however, the term includes products of very variable composition."

QUALITY IN CANNED TOMATOES.

It is a very good time for some of the canners to recall to mind the historical fact that there were some very bad tomatoes put on the market by last year's pack, and that a considerable amount of sullen dissatisfaction was awakened among consumers and among the trade. Some of these tomatoes were likened to "hogs' feed" and were considered neither toothsome nor tempting to the eye. Will there be any such stock put up this year? Let us hope there won't be. Those who put them up a year ago ought now to ponder well the question whether it will pay to do the same unclean sort of work again. The punishment that fits the crime may probably have overtaken them before this in the form of departed patronage, or it may be that the faltering confidence of their customers may require stronger guarantees that only good stock will be shipped. Let good stock be furnished though the heavens fall. It is for civilized white people to eat.

The raw material from which the most objectionable of last year's tomato pack was made was undoubtedly unripe fruit. The reason probably was that the crop of green tomatoes was a larger one than that of ripe tomatoes at a certain part of the month. It always happens that way in the early part of August, but if there is plenty of sunshine and no frost, all the green tomatoes will be red before the public are greatly excited for new canned tomatoes. And canners ought to wait in all cases until the tomatoes are red before they put them up in packages for people's table. Possibly the practice of contracting to supply stock before the raw material is blooming may have something to do with the manufacture of green into canned tomatoes. But a contract to arrive presupposes quality as well as quantity, and though there may be danger that the quality is not going to be available if only perfect raw material is depended on, is it going to mend matters to sacrifice quality in order to piece out the quantity? Jobbers would prefer to have the quantity curtailed rather than the quality lowered. The desire to produce goods at a minimum cost had probably more to do with the matter than any other cause. It is a very shallow course to pursue at all events, as it does the very reverse of what a wide-awake manufacturing policy always aims to do, that is, to expand the consumptive demand by the popularity of the goods turned out, not to cause a shrinkage in it.

There may be some difficulty in getting enough ripe tomatoes this year, as cool and cloudy weather has been rather common for some time, and that is not the kind to ripen tomatoes. A short pack there may be, but there is no earthly necessity why there should be a bad or partially bad one. A confectioner may find it hard to get enough sound eggs to make a required number of cakes, but that difficulty seldom drives him to bad eggs as a substitute. Such a course would get him into a worse hole than the one he was trying to get out of.

FIVE O'CLOCK CLOSING.

The agreement among the wholesale grocery houses to close at 5 o'clock came to an end on Monday, that being the last day of August. The practice of closing at 5 had become popular, however, and nearly everybody concerned was sorry to see the thing run out. Consequently it has been proposed, and with quite general approval, that the agreement be renewed. The majority appear to favor the idea of making 5 o'clock the closing hour all the year round. There would be nothing lost by doing so. Unless in very stirring times there is not enough business done after 5 o'clock to make it necessary that all hands should remain in the office and warehouse another hour. And in really busy times, as in the midst of the summer's sugar excitement, nobody sticks out for the very letter of the closing rule. There was a lot of over-work done cheerfully by the staffs of the various houses last July, and this ought to be considered when the proposal to make 5 o'clock the perennial closing hour is brought before the attention of the principals. A little time for recreation and self-improvement is time really invested in the service of employers, and the extra hour should not be begrudged. To be at leisure for the evening a man ought to have his dinner at 6 o'lock, and if he has to work till six he will have little chance to avail himself and his family of the many opportunities afforded by evening life in this city for healthful, thoughtful and pleasurable entertainment. Of course, in bygone years the office hours were longer than they are now, but everyone wonders why, as nobody was really benefited. All work and no recreation makes a machine of a man. An exacting sense of duty may be begotten of such discipline, but energetic business powers can not be. Something more than an alternation between work and sleep is necessary to make a business man out of the best mental and physical material.

A customer secured is a promise of greater salary in time.

HINTS ON BOOKKEEPING.

ARTICLE III.

A source of more trouble to Retail Merchants than any other book that is kept in connection with their business is the day book. Numerous are the disputes that arise between merchants and their customers over entries contained therein, and many a customer is lost because some one has blundered in the making up of these entries. What is everybody's business is nobody's business, and the custom that prevails so generally of allowing every one in the store to make entries in the day book is the principal cause of so many of these unfortunate disputes arising. The clerk who makes a wrong entry in the day book generally sticks to it that he is right even if a strong suspicion exists in his mind that he may be wrong. Being afraid of the censure of his employer, he rarely admits having made an error unless the error is so plain that there can be no doubt about it. The benefit of the doubt is seldom given to the customer, who leaves the shop feeling that he has been cheated and makes up his mind to deal somewhere else.

Disputes often take place over goods that have been returned because no credit entry has been made in the day book of the returns. When an article has been returned by a customer, which has been charged to him, credit should be given him in the day book for the amount, even if an exchange has been made for other goods of the same value, in which case the goods given in exchange should be charged, for many customers have a distinct recollection of returning goods, but no recollection of receiving an equivalent in value in other goods, and if no record is kept of the transaction it is impossible to prove the exchange. Every day book should have separate columns for the debit and credit entries, and the debit columns containing the amounts of goods sold on credit can be added up and entered in the ledger to the credit of merchandise account, then the credit columns containing the amounts of produce received on account and goods returned, when added up can be entered to the credit of merchandise account, and the sums total of these colums will balance the debit and credit entries made to the accounts of the different customers. By this means the double entry system is carried out without any more work than the single entry.

Mistakes often happen, too, by cancelling a day book entry when a customer pays for a bill of goods within a few days after getting it, by marking "paid" in the margin of the book opposite the entry. When the keeping of the day book is everybody's business an entry is often cancelled in this way after the amount has been posted to the debit of the customer's account in the ledger, so that accounts are often rendered with items included which have been paid for, causing customers to lose faith in the honesty of the merchant they are dealing with. An entry once made should never be cancelled or erased if books are to be kept accurately.

When the very common custom originated of crediting cash received on account in the day book we do not know, but it is a very bad one, for if no entry of cash received on account is made in the cash book it of course must go in with the cash sales, thereby showing an erroneous idea of the business done on a cash basis, and if it is entered from the day book in to the cash book the day book entry is a useless one and only leads to complications in the bookkeeping.

Complications too frequently arise from the manner in which enteries are made in produce dealings. It would be an excellent plan if every country merchant kept a produce account which would show the profit or loss made on all the produce handled, but an account would need more careful attention than the majority could devote to it, therefore the next best thing to do in this matter is to keep a correct record of all the produce received on account by entering the full particulars in the day book when giving the customer credit for it. When a customer brings in produce and trades it over the counter for goods, if the exact amount of the produce is traded out their is no necessity for an entry when a produce account is not kept, but if the goods purchased amount to more than the produce or vice versa then the details of the whole transaction should be entered, to avoid disputes when an account is rendered, in place of the usual entry "balance on trade."

CHATHAM RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

CHATHAM, Ont., Aug. 25th, 1891.

When the meeting was called to order by the president, there was a fair crowd of members, John McCowie, Esq., president, in the chair.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

Mr. Wilson withdrew his notice of motion as given at the last meeting.

The secretary proposed Mr. T. W. Pearson as a member.

Moved by Mr. Wilson, seconded by Mr. Heyward, that Mr. Pearson, just proposed, be accepted as a member and enrolled.—Carried.

The secretary informed the meeting that Mr. Maranette's retiring from business left his office as director vacant.

Moved by Mr. Heyward, seconded by Mr Wood, that Mr. Brenan be director in place of Mr. Maranette, retired.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Heyward, seconded by Mr. Morgan, that the secretary notify each member to be present at the next meeting to discuss the peddling nuisance.—Carried.

After attending to some other small matters the meeting adjourned.

W. H. ADAMS, Secretary.

The Chatham association will always be glad to hear from other associations.

SUCCESS DEPENDENT ON OPPORTUNITY.

Do we ever stop to realize how much human success is dependent upon opportunity? The world is full of square men who are industriously engaged in trying to fill round holes, and the men occupying the square holes are in like manner misfits. How many men waste the energies of an entire life in misdirected efforts simply because they have never found a fit opportunity for the development of such abilities as they possess. A man who possesses decided executive capacity, is competent to successfully handle great interests, or control an army of workers, perhaps plods away for years in some subordinate, routine position, because the opportunity has never come for him to display his mental calibre. He has never struck the right line, is probably engaged in a business for which he is wholly unfitted, and in which he will never be anything but a failure. Another, perhaps through a merely fortuitous circumstance, it may be an almost accidental connection with a man prominent in some special line, is placed in a position for which he happens to possess marked capabilities, although as yet undeveloped. He does not even know himself that he possesses any special fitness for the post. But with opportunity comes development. Manifesting continually increasing capacity for the business, he is pushed ahead, the scope of his authority broadened, and he becomes in time a type of the highly successful man.

Placed in a different position, one for which he had no aptitude, he might have run on in the same dull groove gradually deteriorating into a mere machine, doing his work perfunctorily and without interest. But when he has found his special work he grows mentally with every day's experience, and finally rises to the extreme height of efficiency.

It is too often the case that the unsuccessful men, those who have made a failure of their life's work, have merely lacked the opportunity to develop what was in them, and in their failures are rather to be pitied than blamed. It is true that even persistent plodding will sometimes reach the goal of success, but the way is a long one, and the final rewards hardly commensurate with the toil involved.

The man is indeed fortunate to whom opportunity comes early in life, and who has the good judgment to grasp it while the way is clear. It is said of some men that they compel opportunity; but for one who succeeds in that effort there are many who fail. That occupation for which a man is well adapted, by natural temperament, by physical and mental qualifications, and by training, is the one to which he ought to devote his best energies, for although he may achieve a measure of success in other callings, it will never be so complete or so liberal in its material rewards as that for which he is naturally qualified. Let us have fewer square pegs in round holes.—Ex,

THE CURRANT CROP.

Messrs. Burlumi & Co., of London, under date of August 12th, report : Our estimate of the crop of 1890, has been fully verified. In our annual report of August 6th, 1890, we put it at about 140,000 to 150,000 tons. The actual outturn was 147,500 tons, against 145,000 in 1889, and 160,000 in 1888. The distribution has been as follows : United Kingdom and Australia, 69,000 tons ; United States and Canada, 16,500 ; France, 40,700 ; rest of Europe, 21,300. The quality, though somewhat deficient in size, was very good ; and the average of the prices obtained by the growers above that of the previous season. The anticipations of those speculators who sold "bear" at the outset, on the expectation that the excise duty (droit de fabrication) imposed in France in the end of July, 1890, would be the death-blow of the industry of wine-making from currants, were not realised. France used fewer currants in the last than in the previous season, simply because she could get no more. She used all that could be spared from the other consuming countries, and at prices higher on the average than in any previous season since 1882-83. The new French tariff has been voted by the Chamber of Deputies, and is now before the Senate. There is very little doubt that it will become law, and come into force in March next, substantially as it left the Chamber of Deputies. It raises the duty on currants and raisins from 6 fr to 15 fr.; but the excise duty is reduced from 12 fr. to 3 fr., leaving the burden practically as it was. On the other hand, the duty on wines has been quadrupled, and currants will certainly feel the benefit of this alteration sooner or later. The estimates as to the yield of the new crop vary as usual. It will certainly be larger than the last, and probably the largest on record; it may exceed 160,000 tons, but we doubt whether it will reach 170,000 tons. The quality looks promising, but we fear that the fruit will not be as sound as that of last season, owing to the prevalence of south winds in the month of July and the consequent appearance of rot in several districts. Cutting has commenced, and will become general within the week. The farmers are willing to do their best to house the fruit in good condition, and it is to be hoped that fine dry weather will second their efforts. One full month from date is required to secure the whole crop. Shipments will be about a week later than last year, unless forced by unwise competition amongst the shippers. The growers have high pretensions, being encouraged by the high prices at which the remnants of the old crop have lately been bought for France. They expect moreover, great things from the new French tariff. Business has already been done at the parity of 17s. 9d. for Calamata, and 18s. for Gargagliano, c.i.f. London in barrels. In Marseilles over 2,000 tons have been sold for September delivery at from 39 fr. 50c. to 41 fr. c.i.f., these being about the equivalent of the above prices in English money. By the end of the current month the stocks in the countries of consumption, with the exception of England, will have been exhausted, and this fact will, no doubt, be taken advantage of by the growers. If the new French tariff comes into force in March, 1892, all currants will have been exported from Greece before that time. Consuming countries, other than France, must complete their yearly supplies earlier, because what they do not take will be sent to France, to avoid the payment of 15 fr. instead of 6 fr., the present import duty.

WHOLESOMENESS OF CANNED GOODS.

The explanations of science are as unsatisfactory to the common-sense logician as a woman's reasons. At the time we last went to press, trade circles were agitated by an alleged case of poisoning by canned salmon. A boy ate some canned salmon, and the boy died ; an inquest was held, and adjourned for further evidence. The salmon had been supplied by Messrs. Game, Harrison and Larner, and had been packed by one of the most respectable of Canadian firms, so there was nothing suspicious, as regards its origin. Moreover the Metropolitan Grocers' and Provision Dealers' Asssociation with commendable promptitude seized upon a couple of the tins of the same salmon and sent them for analysis to Mr. Otto Hehner, who was so well satisfied of their wholesomeness that, after analysing a portion, he breakfasted on the remainder with perfect satisfaction to himself and with no disturbance to his internal economy.

Still the boy died, and science had to account for his death. The scientific explanation was that the boy died from poisoning by a rare form of animal poison called ptomaine which is produced by the decomposition—which need not necessarily be putrefactive decomposition—of the albumen of animal foods. This decomposition may occur entirely irrespective of the process of canning. In fact, so said the chemist, it may occur in any animal food, milk or cheese, or even in bread ; so that, according to this theory, unsuspected death may lurk in the simple chop or the unsophisticated crust of bread and cheese. There was no "ptomaine" discovered in the vicera of the child or in the remaining contents of the tin, but the jury, as, I suppose, in duty bound, discovered that the child died from "the effects of an irritant poison — ptomaine — probably contained in the tin of salmon," though they added, "the tins of salmon have been medically examined and found sound and properly preserved, and no blame attaches to the vendor.

Could anything more unsatisfactory be conceived? Either the salmon was unwholesome and the boy died from eating it, or it was perfectly wholesome and he died from something else. The theory of "ptomaine" is captivating to the imagination, but whoever heard of a death being attributed to the ptomainiacal roast mutton or slice of blead? Why should canned provisions be handicapped by an adverse verdict, which has no direct evidence to support it? It is another evidence of the iniquitous prejudice which exists against canned foods in this country, and will find means of damning them without reason.

I have always maintained that canned foods, if obtained from a good house, supply better evidence of purity than any other comestibles that we can obtain ; their label is a certificate of origin. The business of canning is not to be lightly undertaken. The packers are firms who employ labor to an immense extent, and who live by their reputation—so for the matter of that do the great importing firms in this country. They can't afford to be dishonest or careless. It would mean ruin. Accidents may accasionally occur. No human enterprise is free from them, else there would be railroad disasters, and Her Majesty's ships would not sink in mid-channel. Now and then air may get into an imperfectly soldered tin and the contents may decompose, but the occurrence is rare. Mr. McAuslane testified at the inquest that thirty-three and a half million tins were imported into the United Kingdom last year,and although he had heard he said, of alleged cases of poisoning, he had never yet seen one proved. I have studied the subject for some years and my opinion is at one with that of Mr. McAuslane.

Apropos of this subject The Trade, of Baltimore, the organ of the canning industry in the United States, has been discussing the question whether the consumption of canned goods displaces other foods, and if so to what extent. The Trade assumes that the working classes of the United States, being about three-fifths of the population, consume about sixteen million dollars worth of canned goods in the year or about half the production, but our contemporary concludes that canned food is with the American working man something in the nature of a luxury which he would forego, if times were hard. He says if they "grew severe enough, the consumption of canned goods would cease for ordinary staples; the business itself is an outgrowth of the improvement of living in America as compared with that of other countries, and the canned goods business is not possible in those old countries as it has been with us, because they live much nearer to mere necessity than we do, at least among their wage working class."

This, in the simple language of Euclid, is absurd; in politer phrase our contemporary is misled in his conclusions by his imperfect knowledge of the conditions that obtain over here. The ordinary diet of our working classes is, in proportion to its force value, about the most extravagant in the world. They would probably economise if they would take to canned foods, but they are governed by prejudice and would die of starvation rather than do so.—The Provision Trades' Gazette.

COURTESY AND CASH.

Everybody's Chum writes in New England Grocer :

Said a gentleman to me the other day :— " There are very few retail grocers who are not perfectly courteous to customers, but there are some who seem to overlook entirely the fact that courtesy is just as much a stock in trade as are good goods, honest prices and honest weight. There is one in our town who is not only himself impolite, overbearing and discourteous, but all of his clerks are the same way—made so from the example set them by their employer probably. They wait upon customers as if they were doing a great favor by allowing people the high privilege of trading there, just as if there were not a plenty of good stores near by. They act as if they were angry if you ask for what you want, and if they take up a thing that you don't want, and you tell them so, they slam and slat around at a great rate. They snap and snarl, and were never known to give anybody a civil reply."

"Now I never run a bill, not even for a week or a day, as I pay cash. It never makes any difference, it is always cash. If I purchase a yeast cake or a barrel of flour it is cash down. For this reason, if for no other, when that grocer has scores of people who are as well, and better, able to pay their bills as I am, but keep dragging along and paying only small amounts at long intervals, while I pay cash, I think I ought at least to be treated with courtesy, and that I am entitled to civil answers. If I pay cash and buy the best, I don't know why I shouldn't have what I want, and why the clerks shouldn't wait upon me pleasantly, as I never make any more bother for them than I cannot possibly help. I am not singled out for this sort of treatment, but everybody complains of it."

I quite agree with my friend in what he says ; but am inclined to think it is on account of thoughtlessness more than wilfulness. But it reems to me that the proprietor is most to blame, for if he sets such an example to his clerks, it is only natural, (and he must expect it), for them to follow. This is a topic worthy of serious consideration by every grocer in the land. Courtesy and pleasant manner toward customers are what do most toward building up a good trade. Cash customers pay if any do, first, because cash customers usually buy the best goods and think more of getting good goods rhan getting them at a low price. But cash customers are not bound to any one store ; and if they do not receive what they think is proper treatment they will leave and go somewhere else.

My advice would be to grocers : Study courtesy and politeness, and insist upon your clerks doing the same.

Although I have a small family and don't require so many goods as some, I pay cash down for everything I buy, be it one cent's worth or $10 worth. Every time a thing is ordered, it is paid for. I am at square ends with my grocer exery hour of the day, and every day in the year. If I dou't find what I want at one place I go to another ; but if I was shabbily treated I would leave a place mighty quick, and leave for good.

CHANGED CONDITIONS.

Merchants and manufacturers are fast geting rid of the notion that open and free competition is the life of trade, and are coming more and more to advocate fair competition and co-operation. These new ideas are taking hold of the retail grocers, and we are pleased to note being advocated in their gatherings. Recently Mr. J. G. Robb addressed the Minneapolis Association, and in an admirable manner brought many truths and axioms of trade to notice, as witness the following exracts from his speech :

A pleasant answer turneth away wrath, but a pleasant grocer wins trade. Could one have photographed the hearts of the grocers of Minneapolis, fourteen months ago, you would have found them full of dissapointment, discouraged and many almost ready to give up. To-day, could we take another impression, we would find them full of hope and energy. The reason for this is, he is getting his rights, which an unrestricted competition had before deprived him of. He has been doing right by his fellow men, and is growing to believe that the future is bright and he hopes by dint of energy and fair dealing some time in the near future to be in a position where he can relieve himself of the great strain of body and mind he has been under in consequense of this relentless competition. One year ago last month what did we find? We found 350 grocerymen pulling 350 different ways. You were working like heroes from morning to night, week in and week out, without any visible signs or gain, but hoping that by your industry and sacrificing your whole time and comfort to the business, that you might succeed.

Energy such as grocerymen possess will conquer anything on earth that can be conquered with good management, but without good management your efforts will be fruitless.

Harmony is the basis of your actions ; your business is one of the most exacting.

You cannot give a $15 service for $14 and make money.

There is nothing that will bring success like co-operation.

In the past year you have raised the value of every grocery stock in the city, you have raised yourself in the estimation of each other as gentlemen, and to-day are in shape to carry out any needed reform.

There are plenty of errors in the grocery business yet to be corrected, and we trust that each of you will assist heartily in supporting every movement that may be made in the future in that direction. Let your aim be to take good care of the confidence reposed in you by your customers ; when they leave an open order with you see that it is filled conscientiously with the best you have, remembering that you are catering to the palate, and if you please that your success is assured.

Away with the idea of cheapness ! Encourage those that you buy goods of to handle the best goods, by buying the best goods of them, and strive to lead your customers to know the truth, that quality not quantity is the best for them. Low-grade goods are always used as leaders, and while they may in some instances yield you a temporary profit, it is a questionable one, as you cannot compute the injury to your reputation in handling such goods, while fine goods are satisfactory and makes a walking advertiser of each of your customers.

There is a world of force in the statement that "You cannot give a $15 service for $14 and make money." And yet that is steadily being done and to such an extent that associations can only modify instead of cure the evil. In a large Westerr. city where the grocers are nearly all connected with an association there is an agreement that flour shall be sold at a margin of 40c. per barrel or 10c. per bag. This is an instance of a $15 service for $14. If a barrel of flour costs $5 delivered at the store it will be found that it costs 40c. to perform the service connected with its sale. It must bear its proportion of labor, rent, insurance, taxes, interest, delivery wagon and indentals of the business, which experience shows to be about 8 per cent., taking an average for the United States. The grocers in the city referred to cover the cost of their flour service and literally work for nothing. In order to get a fair pay for their work flour should be sold at a profit over lay down cost of not less than 75c. per barrel. Probably the grocers formerly were foolish enough to do what many are doing to-day and sell flour at an advance of from 10 to 25c. per barrel—in other words, pay the consumer a premium for the privilege of service.

This folly can only be overcome by persistent labor by grocers among themselves and in the manner adopted by Mr. Robb.

It is the complete service which wins and holds trade rather than price, a fact which many retailers have yet to recognize. It is encouraging, however, to note progress in the right direction, and we urge grocers to continue to patiently labor for fair pay for an honest and competent service.

If by co-operation they can secure a margin of 40c. per barrel or the cost of the service, why cannot they go a step further and secure a profit?—American Grocer.

A reputation for truthfulness is indispensable to permanent and satisfying success.

THE PROPRIETOR "FORWARD."

Says Ironmongery: How many business men fully appreciate the fact that the public, and particularly regular customers, do not take kindly to a shop where the proprietor is seldom or never seen, or if seen, keeps aloof from them? It is a fact, however, as many a tradesman has discovered to his cost, perhaps when too late to rectify the fault. Some men have a repugnance to serving customers; they ought never to have gone into trade at all, they are unsuited for it. Others conceive that their duty is a general supervision, that their place is in the office, which should be as remote from the shop as possible, or that they cannot afford to waste time in talk that is not immediately productive. All this ignores certain traits of human nature whereof it would be more profitable to take note. It goes without saying that the tradesman cannot be equally attentive to all his customers, nor do all look for his personal attention, but he ought as far as possible to be where he can see who comes into his shop and discriminate judiciously as to whom he ought to see personally. It never derogates from any man's dignity to be courteous and affable, and a gracious word to this one, an inquiry of that if he is being served with what he wants, are ways of being affable that take little time and yet impart to the customer that agreeable sense of being welcome and a person of some importance. Even time spent in apparently unproductive chat with a customer who expects to be treated with extra consideration is not wasted, only put out at interest. We have to deal with human nature as it is, not as we should like it to be, and human nature, as a rule, likes to be made much of. Customers like to know the man they deal with, or to think that they know him, which is much the same thing, and where the tradesman understands the fine art of being social without presumption, attentive without obsequiousness, cordial without impertinence, he will bind his customers to him by ties which few men are proof against.

SPLENDID PEACHES.

In the light of present facts, the peach crop of 1891 will rank in the history of the Chesapeake peach region as one of the finest ever known. Despite all the murmurs of a month ago about yellows and reduced estimates, the yield is phenominal in quantity and unprecented in the quality of the fruit. Other years have had great yields, but the size of the bulk of the fruit was in inverse ratio to the number of peaches; other years have produced magnificently fine fruit, but it was at the expense of quantity.

This year, in our experience and opinion, stands alone in this section in having produced an immense crop of splendid peaches. As we write we have a half dozen peaches before us, bought in a daily market shed, and they measure from 9¼ to 10 inches in circumference. These were selling at 60 cents per peck retail, and were not held as prize peaches. Large lots of such have been received during the past few days. Every year brings some, but the fruit stands and packers bid them up to such prices that they never get into the retail market houses; this year they are numerous enough to be found by all. Peaches of what would usually be considered very fine size are in immense quantities, and it is certain better peaches will this year be packed as pie stock than often go into standards. The entire receipts are far above the average quality, even of short crop years, the flavor is as rich as the quantity of fruit is great, and the prices as low as low can be.

This phenominal condition is due to the rest the trees have had by the reason of the entire failure of the crop last year, but it is not a good thing for the peach growers, as they lost last year entire and get hardly freight this year, from the excess, fine as the goods are.

But we think the Maryland and Delaware Canned Goods Packers should take this exceptional opportunity to put up fine selected fruit, if only to let the world know that it can furnish such as cannot be equalled for the three combined qualities of size, flavor and the firmness of texture that is requisite to a perfect canned peach. Such goods will attract immense attention at Chicago next year, and this is the chance to pack them for the trees will probably not be, even in their best average condition in a season following such an one as this is.—Baltimore trade.

TWO VIEWS OF MIDDLEMEN.

A few week's since one of our Eastern contemporaries discussed the question of middlemen in trade, presenting the problem whether they could be profitably dispensed with by manufacturers and if that course would also be in the saving and interest of the retail storekeepers. No conclusion was reached in that article nor did there seem to be a desire throughout its whole length to solve the problem presented. In fact, the question of intermediate agents between maker and seller was treated much as the enigmas in the puzzle column of certain journals, which, having presented a conundrum, leave its solution to whoever is minded to undertake that task.

Singularly enough the puzzle presented by the New York trade paper in question, has since been taken up and attempted to be solved by a gathering of persons styling themselves the Alliance Commercial Convention, and assembled at Topeka, Kan., last week. This body, which, as its name implies, was chiefly composed of farmers, fearlessly grappled with the question, being fully persuaded that it had a sufficient commercial knowledge to instantly solve the problem that has perplexed the business world, according to writers sacred and secular from about the time of Joseph, governor of Egypt in the time of his father Jacob, and who charged that certain middlemen were only spies come to see the nakedness of the land.

After first determining that some of the Alliances represented in the convention were so managed as to make their business integrity a subject of strong suspicion, and insisting that the crooked ones should be made straight and the worthless ones rooted out entirely, the body resolved that out of the remainder the best should be retained as commercial agents, or, rather, as members of the Consolidated Commercial Alliance. A brief outline of the full purpose of the convention being called for, it was succintly stated to be to kill the middlemen, and reasons numerous, diverse and of varying force were given why the work of slaughter should not be delayed, commencement being suggested at Kansas Gity in order that farmers might save to themselves the sums of money that commission merchants now exacted for selling the stock of one farmer to another. Hereafter, it was ordered, buyer and seller must come together personally.

Thus it will be seen that the farmers have determined that however it may be with others, for themselves they want no middlemen. Yet as a matter of fact the farmers are almost the only class having products to sell who cannot get along without middlemen. The manufacturer may be his own jobber, and in some lines is. He may buy direct and sell direct, but that privilege is not open to the farmer, who of himself has no commercial connections whatever. Yet the manufacturer who is constantly in the market generally finds it prudent and presumably profitable also to retain the services of others to sell his wares, and so of trade at large. The middleman is a part of the existing commercial system and method which neither of the other departments of commerce cares to dispense with. He is a convenience to both maker and seller, and it could readily be shown that so far from being an expense to those he serves his employment by them is an economic policy. Only the inexperience in commercial affairs of the farmers permits them to doubt the wisdom and economy of retaining the middlemen, and as we have said, they cannot do without them. The farmer cannot sell his own grain in Europe. He cannot even arrange for its ocean transportation. He cannot even sell it on the domestic exchange without paying a commission for the privilege, and to extemporize methods of getting his wheat to market through other than the regular commercial channels would cost him far more than the services of the most experienced middleman would amount to.

It is more than likely that if he essayed to contrive a plan of his own to deal on the wholesale plan he might encounter the experience and adversity outlined in the subjoined account of fraud recently and extensively practiced upon Michigan farmers. In that case it related that a bogus firm styling itself the Chicago Dealers Association imposed upon guillible farmers after this manner: An agent made the rounds and sold privileges for $5 each to buy goods at wholesale prices, securing about seventy-five or eighty member. Each was given a catalogue of prices. It was found on examination, however, that the so-called wholesale rates were about 10 per cent. higher than the regular prices in the retail stores, and, beside this, the patrons of the association must pay freight and buy in wholesale quantities. This is like the experience of patrons of grange stores some years ago that were organized to do away with middlemen. But the regular middlemen were soon invited to return and heartily welcomed to their old places.—Ex.

CLEANLINESS IN CANNING SALMON

The sale of salmon in many localities is affected by unfounded prejudice which seems to have gained ground either through ignorance or spite. Grocers have no doubt heard something like this: "If you knew how salmon were packed on the river you would not eat them."

The fact is that most canneries on the Columbia river are as clean as any eastern kitchen. It does not necessarily follow that the employment of Chinamen and other foreigners renders the fish any more liable to contamination. The work is done under the supervision of the proprietor, and very often the man who attends to distributing them in eastern markets, the greatest care being taken in all departments to insure cleanliness.

The retail grocer who deals directly with the consumer may find it to his advantage to refute this idea that fish are packed in great haste and put into the cans in any way. The process of canning these fish is quite interesting and may prove instructive to those who have not had the opportunity of witnessing it. First the fish are thrown on the wharf from the boats and counted. From there they are put on a long table and the heads cut off and the viscera removed. The offal falls through holes in the cleaning table and into deep water.

The canneries are usually some distant from the shore line, so there is no danger of the refuse drifting ashore. The eviscerated and headless fish is then thrown into a tank filled with water, and the scurvy, slime and dirt partially removed. After a thorough soaking the fish are put into another tank and undergo a second and more thorough cleansing. The salmon being nice and clean is then placed on a drainer and thoroughly dried.

From the drainer the fish is conveyed to a gang knife with blades which are so arranged as to cut the fish just the right length to be placed in a can, to wit: five inches. The cutter is operated with a lever and it is remarkable how rapidly a salmon can be cut into length, and a half turn of the lever is all that is necessary to do the work. From the gang knife the cut-up fish passes into a hopper.

The hopper feeds into a most ingenious machine called the can filler. This machine fills the cans at the rate of 55 a minute—nearly a can every second. The can filled with salmon is then carefully washed off to remove small pieces of salmon and is then passed to the toppers, who dexterously and almost in the twinkling of an eye put the top on the can. The crimper next takes the can in hand, and it is really astonishing how quickly the top is crimped.

The next process is where the top of the can is soldered. It is done automatically by a machine and it is marvelous how nicely the work is done. The can is then hustled along into an inclined trough with the solder on the top in a soft liquid state. The can revolves in going down the inclined trough and thus the solder sets evenly all around the top, Near the end of the trough is a jet of water which cools the can and sets the solder good and hard.

Then the cans are put in iron coolers, each of which contains 152 cans, and plunged into cold water. Here the can is tested. If a bubble is seen on any part of the can, top, sides or bottom, it is marked and sent back for repair.

From the cooling trough the cans are conveyed to the boiling tanks. There are six of them. They are of cast iron, filled with water, which is heated by steam. The cans remain in the boiling water for an hour, and here the fish is well cooked. After the first cooking is finished, the cans are all pierced and all the gas and air is blown off, when the cans are again sealed up. The cans are then supposed to be ready for another cooking.

Another test is made in cold water to discover if there are any holes in the cans. The cans are then placed on little cars and run into a large boiler retort. This retort is 13 feet in length, and about 6 feet in diameter, and holds a large number of cans. When the cans are safely immersed in this boiler the door is hermetically sealed and about 13 or 14 pounds pressure of steam to the square inch is turned on. The result is that the heat on the interior of the boiler rises to 240 degrees Fahrenheit. In this heat the salmon is cooked for a full hour.

After coming out of the hot ordeal it is presumed that the salmon is cooked well enough to suit the most fastidious. The cans are then put into a solution which is 60 per cent. caustic soda, and here they are thoroughly cleaned of oil, dirt and other impurities.

Next the cans are piled up 10 or 15 high and allowed to cool off. An examination is made at intervals for "swell." The cans that are swelled are immediately condemned, as the presence of gas in a can is positive evidence that decomposition has set in, and canners prefer to sustain the loss themselves rather than that the reputation of canned salmon should suffer. The next step in the progress of the can is to lacquer it. The lacquer consists of a composition of asphaltum, varnish or turpentine. From 120 to 150 cans are dipped into the composition, which is heated, at a time. The coated can dries almost as soon as the can is lifted out of the lacquer. Labels are then put on the cans, and then they are put into cases ready for the market.—Chicago Grocer.

The match between the grocers of Hamilton and Dundas, at baseball, has fallen through, the Hamilton grocers having backed out. It seems that they learned in some way that the Dundas grocers stayed up at nights pounding bags of sand to harden their hands and get their muscles into order for wielding the bat, and run fifteen times around the Dundas race track before breakfast every morning so as to enable them to run the bases without being winded, and this rather frightened the Hamilton men off the game. When Dundas undertakes to do anything it does it right up to the handle, and the Hamilton grocers have probably saved themselves from deep and lasting humiliation by declining to face them on the ball field.—Dundas Banner.

The flour and feed dealers of Hamilton are going to organize and place a buyer on the grain market to purchase for them so as to keep prices steadier. At present there are so many representatives on the market that the prices are constantly fluctuating, owing to the unsteady character of the demand.

The by-law prohibiting the peddling of vegetables by market gardeners from door to door has gone into force in Owen Sound. Henceforth they must expose their goods for sale on the market until 10:30 a. m., after which they may sell them to storekeepers, but not to private families.

The Carleton, N. B., grocery clerks are asking that the few paltry cents which some storekeepers might make by keeping open all night, should not weigh against the early closing movement. They think that when the dealers who really do the business of the west side are in favor of the movement that those who have but small patronage should fall into line.

Messrs. W. H. and Fred Davis, grocers, of Mitchell, have had hard luck with their horses. Two years ago they purchased a fine animal in Wingham, which cost them nearly $150, and it soon after died on their hands. A couple of weeks ago, another, which was not of much value, also died, and on Saturday evening, while their boy was delivering parcels in town, driving along leisurely, the third horse, for which they paid a good price only a little while ago, broke one of his legs.

In conversation with Mr. Byrn, of Turner, Beeton & Co., Victoria, B.C., a representative of THE GROCER, was informed that neither of the companies' brands of canned salmon, "Balmoral" or "Inverness," would be on sale for the Canadian market this year. It is all going to foreign ports.

A lawsuit that will prove of the greatest interest to business men is about to be brought before the courts in Quebec. A merchant, finding himself in financial difficulties, applied to a certain party for a loan of $1,000 and gave his note for that sum and another note for $4,000 at three months as collateral security. The lender deducted $100 from the loan for commission and interest and the borrower actually received only $900. Later on he failed and when his estate was being wound up the two notes, which by this time had passed into the hands of a third party, were presented for payment. The curators refused to recognize the $4,000 note on the ground that no consideration had been received and are going to test the matter in court. The lender's claim is that he took this note in order to secure himself if the borrower failed, and that the proceeds of the two notes will not even refund him the amount he lent in cash.

GROCERIES.

August did not die just exactly as it lived, for on its very last day there was a very notable improvement in trade, particularly in sugar. September opened favorably in this respect and at present there is encouraging movement in the grocery market. This is rather an earnest than a sample of the business that is looked for after the close of the Exhibition. A much higher rate of activity than has been experienced for several falls is bargained for, and there seems to be the material wealth in the country to realize this expectation. However, no disposition to count the chickens before they are hatched is allowed to get the upper hand, and buying is still regulated by current demand. No heavy buying is being built upon the anticipation of a big fall's trade. Money seems reasonably plentiful, and the big sugar purchases are mostly paid for.

CANNED GOODS.

The tomato situation develops slowly. The plants are thrifty, the fruit formed, but the ripening of it is backward. The want of sunny weather has been felt for the last two weeks. It may come and last long enough to ripen every tomato on the vines, but in the meantime the temperature may take a drop and do a large amount of injury to the fruit. There is not much odds on either side; whether for a full pack or a short one. Jobbers recognize this and refrain from pushing business, as they know neither how much stock they will be able to get nor what the market will probably be when the pack is due. Some houses refuse to quote and will undertake future business only upon conditions that virtually nullify the contract. Some business has been done in round lots of peas, corn and tomatoes upon a basis of $1.10 to deliver when packed. The packing of tomatoes has scarcely been begun yet by the canners, though last year operations at the factories were well on by the middle of August. The price of raw fruit is still about double of that holding a year ago. Peas are selling quite freely at $1.12½ to $1.20. Salmon is active at $1.40 to $1.55 for talls and $1.70 for flats. There is a very good demand. The price of canned corn beef has been lowered by the manufacturers 5c. on 1's and 10c. on 2's.

Mr. W. B. Smith, of Sloan & Crowther, who has just returned from a visit to the Niagara district, reports the appearance of the peach orchards to be very flourishing, and to be far ahead of that of former seasons. The pack this season will almost certainly be a large one.

Says the B. C. Commercial Journal:—Fishing on the Fraser stopped last Wednesday, the 19th Aug., as the sockeye run is over. The Boscowitz arrived from the North on Saturday, with 12,000 cases salmon. There were 700 cases shipped east last week—350 cases to Toronto and 350 to Hamilton.

COFFEE.

The trade in coffee keeps on its even way. The market is well stocked with everything but fine grade Rios. There is a good supply of common grades and of good Mochas, though Javas are not plentiful. Rios are 21 to 23c.

Smith & Keighley received on Monday a consignment of very fine Mocha coffees.

DRIED FRUIT.

A quiet trade continues. The demand for Valencia raisins has been rather better for the finer grades than it was, the easing of the prices for these having drawn more attention to them. The range for Valencias is now 4 to 5c., with 5c. shaded for low grades. Currants are steady and unchanged.

The early shipments of both currants and Valencia rasins are now a fortnight on the way.

The first shipment of sultana rasins was made two weeks ago.

What is expected to make the French demand an unusually large element in the currant market this year, is a proposed change in the tariff, which seems likely to be adopted. The change contemplates a lowering of the excise duty on currant wines, and a raising of the customs duty on fruit from 6 to 15 francs. If this passes it will take effect on the first of March, and all the currants that can possibly be imported into France before that date may be expected to be brought in. The lower excise duty on wines will encourage the French demand which will be as active as possible during the last days of the present customs duty.

NUTS.

Nuts are quiet and featureless, the condition of stocks and the range of quotations remaining unaltered. The Grenoble walnut crop is reported to be a fortnight later than it was last year, owing to the long winter, the rains and lack of warm weather.

RICE AND SPICES.

Some new Japan from our own mills followed the arrival of that which was brought by way of New York a week ago. The later shipment sells ¼c. below the prices at which the first was held, and now Japan rice quotes at 4¾ to 5c. Other grades of rice are quiet, but the trade in Japan is active. Spices have not got into their fall movement yet, but are going out steadily at unchanged prices.

SUGAR.

The incoming of plums, pears, peaches, etc., is creating a very marked revival in the demand for sugar, which begins about the time that the bulk of the sugar bought to preserve the first fruits is paid for. As in the case in the former demand, granulated is what is in leading request, and it goes out briskly at 5c. for lots of 15 barrels and over 5¼c. for smaller lots. The sales for a single day during the present week have been on an average more than those for any whole week during the past month. Yellow sugars are still to be had as low as 3¾c., though the lowest priced is a very dark sugar. Raws are steady at 3½ to 4½c. The lower grades have sold moderately well. The movements of the New York sugar market during the past ten days have been on a basis that was essentially firm, though the prices of refined have gone down. The fall in granulated was undoubtedly a strategic movement to bring down the price of raw, which the refiners were in a position to buy.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

Dark grades of syrups are now offering and are in some request. Some non-branded are selling at 2½ to 2⅝c. Molasses is not receiving much attention on the part either of buyers or sellers. Importers do not consider the present a favorable time to offer.

TEAS.

The demand for teas is steady and substantial. Stocks are increasing all the time and the range of grades and growths is now getting quite full. The lowest-priced Japans are 16c. The demand for new season's Congous is fairly good. It is said to be quite strong in China this year for new crop common Congou.

Game, Harrison and Larner, in a recent circular say: When we last had the pleasure of writing on the 10th ult., we reported the arrival of the first steamer from Hankow, and ventured to predict that the crop was superior to any seen for some years. We are glad to be able to endorse these remarks, as subsequent arrivals have in no way given us reason to alter our views. We very much wish we could speak in such high terms of the Foochow crop. The first cargo of any magnitude arrived on the 23rd ult., and the reception accorded to it by the trade must have been anything but pleasant to the importers, as dealers utterly refused even to make offers. The fine chops of Soo Moo, which are usually the medium of strong competition on arrival, have so far failed to find buyers, and we are not in the least surprised, considering that they in no way compare with the quality the trade has been accustomed to in former years. So far, the only lines sold have been a few parcels of Saryunes, which brought from 6¼d. to 6½d., and one or two parcels of Panyongs from 9d. to 1s. 1½d., and even these look dear when compared with teas of last season's growths. What the future of this year's Foochow crop is likely to be it is difficult to say, but at the time of writing it looks as if it would be most disastrous to importers. Paklings have changed hands freely, prices ranging from 8d. to 11d. for the common and medium kinds; one or two fine lines made from 1s. to 1s. 3d. per lb. New make Congous have been in full supply, and prices have ruled from 7½d. to 8½d. for medium kinds, showing easier rates. Fine and finest kinds are in small supply and bring long prices. Since our last report the New Season's Indian teas have been arriving more freely. Many useful kinds of clear bright liquoring Pekoes with good make are now selling at much under Calcutta cost, thus bringing the market in favor of export from this country. Moreover, at this early time of the year the teas generally carry much more make and style than when the leaf has grown coarser, which is almost invariably the case as the season advances in India. We can now offer good parcels of Pekoe Souchong at about 8½d., and Pekoe leaf to wiry Orange Pekoe from about 9d. to 11d. per lb. This should, we think, induce a good shipping trade for the next few months, and assist in furthering the demand for Indians abroad. Low prices and relatively good quality have created the present heavy consumption of Indian tea in this country, and should the present rates continue, as in all probability will be the case, we consider the same result to be likely on your side. Our foregoing remarks respecting Indian teas in reference to the export trade are applicable to all lower grades of Ceylons. Teas with good make, 10d. and under, are in plentiful supply, and show value exceptionally in favor of buyers.

Sloan & Crowther received on Monday a large shipment of new season's medium Congou and Orange Pekoes.

Davidson & Hay received on Monday 2,100 packages of new season's Congous to sell at prices ranging from 20 to 52c. The quality is better than that of a year ago for corresponding prices.

MARKET NOTES.

Representatives of English houses are now taking orders for fall delivery of bi-carbonate of soda.

The wholesale dealers in wet groceries are being called upon by a representative of James Hennessey & Co., Cognac.

The 5 o'clock closing agreement among wholesale grocers came terminated on Monday evening.

Mr. Wm. Ince, sr., and Mr. A. M. Smith, have returned to town.

Mr. W. E. Murray, local representative of the Canada Sugar Refinery, is back from his holidays.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

The demand is yet limited to an internal market. All the butter arriving here is consumed here or within but a short radius from this point. Export inquiry is still heard from once in a while, and there is no lack of inquiry from country dealers. But there is from 1½ to 2c. between the two sides of the market, and neither seems disposed to make the gulf narrower. Good dairy tub is steady at 14 to 15½c. What keeps up this price is the limitation of the supply which is still bounded by the needs of local consumers, who are more numerous since people have begun to return from their holidays. If more butter arrived that price would not keep up, and export activity might be begun. A firm which is collecting butter for the market abroad, advises buyers here that if the latter cannot get good straight yellow stock at 13c. it is useless to buy at all, as butter above that price cannot be disposed of to pay. Dealers outside want 14c. for their butter, and some of them are unwilling to sell at that figure. The firm in question would take a carload or two on foreign account, but would not go above an offer of a cent below the bid they made three weeks ago. Thirty-five tubs changed hands on Friday at 13c. and was not choice stock either. A round lot of 80 tubs of low grade was sold at 11c. while another 40 tubs of choice stock brought 13c.

Cheese is steady at 10c. for full creams and 9c. for half creams. The British market is firm.

PETROLEUM.

This week's business has been larger than that of any past week for some time. The shrinking daylight is flavoring the demand. Prices are steady at quotations.

The Petrolia Advertiser reports: Petrolia crude $1.35 per bbl. Oil Springs crude $1.35 per bbl. It is reported on good authority that a combination will control the refined burning oil business of Canada this fall. The manufacturers and dealers who have been trying to crush each other by underselling without lessening competition, have concluded that a new departure must be taken this year if any profit is to be derived from the business, and certain prominent gentlemen in the refinery business are said to be quietly mapping out a plan for future co-operation; it undoubtedly will be in the nature of a syndicate, and it is on the cards a proposal will be made to pass the entire business through the hands of one selling agent. The main purpose of course is to advance prices and keep them at a profitable point. The trials and troubles of the last syndicate are still fresh in the minds of the refiners, and some are inclined to think that the same obstacles to success encountered previously, would still be a stumbling block. There are not many active refiners and we understand that they favor an agreement on prices, if a penalty clause could be attached which would act as a menance to violaters of faith. But serious doubts are entertained as to the success of an association which regulates the out put from each refinery and restricts the business to one central head. This feature proved suicidal in the last undertaking on account of broken obligations, but a remedy could be found by either ignoring the guilty persons or having a severe penalty for future offenses. Every association for regulating trade has its trials and it is seldom that we hear of proving unsuccessful when surrounded by the proper safe-guards.

Operations in the drilling line still go on as per usual, all the contractors having their hands' full for quite a while to come, both here and in Oil springs. The producing situation at present is interesting, pending the movements of the manufacturers, which may prove to be an important factor in turning the idea of speculative values either down or up in the immediate future. Waggon oil tanks keep constantly delivering oil at the reciving stations.

DRUGS AND CHEMICALS.

The drug market, so far as it concerns the general traders of the country, shows no important changes. Quotations are steady, and business but fair.

COOK'S FRIEND BAKING POWDER.

The Best Grocers Make a point of Keeping it always in Stock.

MARKETS—Continued.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

BEANS—It is almost immaterial what they quote at, there is so little doing. Prices are $1.70 to $1.80.

DRIED APPLES—Are 7½ to 8c., about non-existent and not wanted.

EVAPORATED APPLES—Are 13½ to 14c., and not in demand.

EGGS—Are somewhat firmer, though but a shade, at 12 to 12½c. The local demand which the Exhibition will give rise to begins to have an effect upon values. Supplies are moderate.

HAY—The receipts have fallen off and prices may probably have to go up to induce freer delivery. They are at present $11 to $12.

HIDES—Are unchanged at 5 to 5½c. for green No. 1 and 6⅛c. for cured, a car of the latter having changed hands last week at that figure.

HONEY—Is unchanged at 7 to 10c. for clear, and 14 to 16c. for comb. New honey is coming in.

HOPS—Are quiet at 30 to 33c. Samples of the new crop have been shown on this market, but opening prices have not been quoted.

POTATOES—Are plentiful and weak at 50 to 60c. a bag.

SKINS—Sheep skins have advanced to 60c.

STRAW—Is in demand and scarce at $6 to $7.

WOOL—Is steady and plentiful at 19c. A lot of 25,000 pounds sold at this figure outside, and another 14,000 lb lot was sold a few days later.

FISH.

The demand is still slow. Prices are in no respect changed. Whitefish are 6½ to 7c., as are also salmon trout and pickerel. Lake herring are steady at $1.75 to $2.

SMALL FRUITS, ETC.

Canadian Crawford peaches are coming in at $1.60 to $1.75 per basket, and Bartlett pears at $5.50 to $6.50 per barrel. Green gauge plums are 75c., Lombards 75c., blues 65c., and common 40 to 50c. Grapes are 10c. per lb. Melons are 20 to 25c Apples are $1.25 per barrel. Crab apples are 30 to 35c. per basket.

GREEN FRUIT.

The demand for green fruit is not yet satisfactory to dealers. Valencia oranges are scarce at $6.50, there are a few Jamaicas at $8.50 to $10, and Sarentos are plentiful at $4.50. Messina lemons are $4.50 to $6.50 according to quality, and Messinas are $5.50 to $6.50. Maoris are $7 to $8.50. Bananas are arriving less freely at $1 to $1.75.

PROVISIONS.

The demand for hog products is still active and prices under its continued operation retain and lend to increase their strength. Some country packers are beginning to inquire for supplies from local houses, which shows that stocks are declining. Also the hogs from which new supplies are to be cut up are now thinner than they usually are at this season, and so are not likely to be ready for slaughter nearly so soon as in former years.

BACON—Long clear is firm at 8½c., bellies at 10½ to 11c., backs 11c., rolls 9c.

HAMS—Are unchanged and in strong demand at 12½ to 13c. for smoked, and 11 to 11½c. for pickled.

LARD—Pure is nearly done, but quotations are still 10¼ to 10¾c., while compound for they remain at 8½ to 9c.

British Markets.

Having closed out our local business, we are now prepared to give special attention to all lines of

IMPERIAL PRODUCE CO'Y.,

OF TORONTO, LTD.,

69 Front Street East, Toronto.

MESS PORK—Heavy is $15 to $15.50, and short cut is $16 to $17.

SALT.

A good trade is maintained at prices which quote on last week's basis for car lots, viz., 70c. for coarse sacks, 80c. for fine, $1.20 for barrels, $1.25 for dairy.

DRY GOODS.

A large business has been transacted since last report. September has opened satisfactorily. Quite an incursion of visitors to the various houses has been a feature that was due to the millinery openings.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Sept. 3, 1891.

It is not the busy season yet, and consequently as regards actual movement, there is little or no business to note in a wholesale way. The indications, however, continue favorable, and importing houses, in all the leading lines, anticipate a good brisk movement this fall. This is more especially the case with dried fruit, etc., but sugar, also, promises a good movement, despite the heavy business that has deen done.

SUGAR AND SYRUP.

The demand for sugar has not been large, but there has been a fair business doing at former prices. Yellows rule at 3¾c. and 4¼c. and a lot of 100 puncheons Barbadoes was sold at 3¾c. Granulated is unchanged at 4⅝c.

Syrups rule quiet and dull at 2¾ to 3¼c.

MOLASSES.

There is a better feeling in molasses. Since our last a cargo has arrived comprising 400 puncheons in which there has been business at 38c. The stock compared with that of last year is much smaller, some 4,600 puncheons against 11,000 puncheons last year.

TEAS.

There is an active market and Japan stock is freely taken around 14½ to 18c., a round quantity in the aggregate being moved during the week. Advices from primary markets report a good business, principally in low grades, and about two-thtrds of the crop has been disposed of. Low grade blacks also meet with good enquiry locally, stock worth from 12½ to 13c. being scarce and wanted.

COFFEE AND SPICES.

There is a fair demand for Rio stock, but the supply here is limited and prices are firm at 20 to 20½c. Prices show no change worth mentioning.

RICE.

Foreign advices on this article are very firm the demand for it being brisk owing to the small crop of grain of all kinds in Europe. We quote Patna $4.50 to $5, choice $4.25 to $4.50, standard $3.90 and off grades 13.50 in car lots.

DRIED FRUIT.

There has been little actual business on spot and in this respect last week's report applies. With regard to business for forward delivery, however, importers state that it was never more encouraging and they anticipate a brisk business this fall. There is nothing new to report regarding new crop in addition to the information given last week either in regard to raisins or currants. Spot values at store on the former are unchanged 4 to 4¼c. and on the latter 5⅞ to 6c.

GREEN FRUIT.

Staple lines of green fruit show no change. Lemons ruling the same $3.50 to $4 and oranges $3.50 to $4.50. In fresh green stock the ordinary jobbing business has been doing with nothing special to mention.

CANNED GOODS.

In a jobbing way the enquiry is small and with nothing on which to base any change, we have none to mention in prices for lots ex store here. Fruits and vegetables, however, show a tendency as regards the future. Tomatoes have been contracted for at 97½c. to $1.01½, a good portion of the local pack being already placed within this. In fish salmon is the chief feature for business, and values have a firmer tendency. Advices claim that the pack is even smaller than expected, and one lot that was bought at $1.12½ on the coast has since been turned over at $1.15. First-class brands are now offering at $1.17 to $1.20.

EGGS.

Despite the fact of free receipts and a large supply, the market as far as prices are concerned has maintained a fairly steady basis. Within the past few days 12½c. has been paid for ordinary and from 13 to 13½c. for limed.

BUTTER.

The market does not show any more activity than a week ago, although a little stir was noted in creamery at one time owing to the fact of a shipper having sold short on August's. This however was a special matter for as far as the natural conditions are concerned the market is the same. Stocks are still held in first hands to high for export as a general thing, but if holders would concede, a fraction movement might result. In fact business in creamery is possible at 20c. and Western dairy 14 to 15c. Finest creamery 20 to 20¼c.; finest townships 16 to 17c.; finest western 14½ to 15c.

IMPORTANT FACTS
ABOUT NOURISHING FOODS.

"OUR NATIONAL FOODS," put up in packages only, are not ordinary foods. They are prepared by the conversion of the starch into dextrine. THEY CONTAIN OVER DOUBLE THE NOURISHMENT THAT IS IN FLESH MEAT. A 4 lb. PACKAGE OF IRELAND'S DESICCATED WHEAT AT 25c. CONTAINS 30 GRAINS MORE NOURISHMENT THAN 10 lbs. OF BEEFSTEAK COSTING ABOUT $1.50. THINK OF THAT. People are beginning to find it out, when they ask now for Ireland's Desiccated Wheat in packages they mean it. The grocer need not say "we have it in bulk just as good," for the customer is at once suspicious, for we do not sell it in bulk. Sold by all first-class grocers and manufactured only by

LEITCH TRADE MARK OAK LAKE

Grinders of MANITOBA WHEAT EXCLUSIVELY

PROVISIONS.

This market continues quiet and without noteworthy feature. A small jobbing demand for pork and lard is all there is to be noted, but prices generally are unchanged. Canadian short cut, per barrel is quoted at $17.00 to $17.25; mess pork, western, per barrel $15.25 to $15.75; short cut, western, per brl $17.00 to $17.25; hams, city cured, per pound 10½ to 11½c.; hams, canvassed, per lb 0 00 to 0 00c.; lard, Canadian, in pails, 8¾ to 9c.; bacon, per pound, 9 to 10c.; lard, com., refined, per lb, 7¾ to 8c.

CHEESE.

As far as purchasing on this side is concerned the market continues active, but in view of the offers from and disposition shown by the Britishers, values here seem high. In fact whether buyers come out on the right side or not rests solely on their ability to make the English buyers come up. At present it is extremely slow work, and what business there is doing is only for actual requirements. For finest western stock here, taking prices paid in the country for a criterion, 10c. and over would have to be paid, and we cannot learn that it has actually been established, in fact 9⅞ is the best price so far. Still 9¾c. has been paid for French stock at the foot, and 9½c. and over for country purchases. We quote: Finest Brockvilles, etc., 9⅞c., finest eastern and States 9⅝ to 9⅞c., fine 9¼ to 9⅜c., medium 8½ to 9c., cable 46s.

GRAIN.

There are no special features to the grain market, actual business on spot being unimportant. The stocks in store compared with a week ago show a decrease of 7,131 bushels of wheat, 5,265 bushels of peas, 12,723 bushels of oats, 1,141 bushels of barley, and a increase of 11,406 bushels of corn, and 1,285 bushels of rye. Compared with the same date last year there is an increase of 186,303 bushels of wheat, 4,317 bushelss of rye, and a decrease of 2,081 bushels of corn, 20,254 bushels of peas, 11,593 bushels of oats, 15,563 bushels of barley. We quote:—No. 2 hard Manitoba, $1.05 to $1.07; No. 3 do., 97c; No. 2 Northern, $1.04 to $1.05, peas 87c. to 88c. per 66 pounds in store; 89 to 90c. afloat; oats, 37 to 38c. per 34 pound; corn, 80 to 82c. duty paid; feed barley, 55c.; good malting do., nominal.

FLOUR.

The tone is steady while holders are in a very independent humor. The fact is millers instructions are to refuse any request for concession. Local demand is fair sufficient to induce a good movement in car lots of staple lines of strong bakers and straight rollers at quotations. There are enquiries for export also, but the bids are too low for holders' ideas here. The stock in store shows a decrease of 5,084 barrels compared with a week ago, and an increase of 5,574 barrels compared with a year ago. Patent spring $5.35 to $5.75, patent winter $5.25 to $5.55, straight roller $4.85 to $5.00, extra $4.60 to $4.70, superfine $4.20 to $4.30, city strong bakers' $5.25 to $5.50, strong bakers' $5.00 to $5.02.

OATMEAL.

There is only a small demand for oatmeal and the market presents nothing important. The stock in store is nil compared with 151 barrels for the same week last year. Standard, per bag $2.80 to $2.90; granulated $2.80 to $2.90; rolled $2.80 to $2.90.

FEED.

The feed market is fairly active under a steady jobbing demand for all sorts. Prices remain steady and we quote:—Bran, $15 to $16; shorts, $19 to $21; middlings, $22 to $25 and moullie, $25 to $30.

HALIFAX MARKET QUOTATIONS.

(Wholesale Selling Rates.)

HALIFAX, Sept. 2, 1891.

BREADSTUFFS.—Have advanced some since our last. Prices keep very firm, with a good export demand for wheat. We believe present prices, will be maintained, at least, until after the fall trade is over and navigation closes.

Manitoba highest grade patents, $6.00 to 6.25; High grade patents, $5.30 to 5.50; Good 90 per cent Patents, $5.20 to 5.50; Straight grade, $5.00 to 5.10; Superior extras, $4.75 to 4.85; Good seconds, $4.40 to 4.55; Graham flour, $4.90 to 5.10; Oatmeal, $5.50 to 5.60; Oatmeal rolled $5.70 to 5.80; Kiln dried corn meal, $3.60 to 3.70; Rolled wheat, $5.50; Wheat bran per ton, $18.50 to 19.50; Middlings, $27.50 to $28.50; Cracked corn, $39.00; Moulee, $30.00; Split Peas $4.40 to $4.50; White beans per bushel, $1.80 to 1.90; Pot Barley per bbl, $3.90 to $4.10; Canadian oats choice quality, 53c. to 55; P. E. I. Oats 46c. to 48.

SUGAR.—Now that the immediate wants of grocers have been filled, the market for soft sugars is easier, a common and expected result being a sag back from extreme figures after the recent large transactions. There are, however, signs of improvement discernable, and very soon when the sugars now in wholesalers hands have gone into consumption another brisk period is expected.

Cut loaf, 5½c.; Granulated, 4⅝ to 4¾.; Circle A, 4½c.; White extra C, 4¼c.; Standard, 3⅞c. to 4c.; Extra yellow C, 3¾c.; Yellow C, 3⅝c. to 3¾c.

MOLASSES.—The molasses market is very quiet, There is little offering on spot but additional supplies are understood to be on the way.

Barbados, 40c.; Demerara, 35 to 38c.; Diamond N. 48c.; Porto Rico, 37 to 38c.; Trinidad, 34 to 35c.; Antigua, 34 to 35.

ST. JOHN, N. B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N.B., Sept. 2, 1891.

We do not see any change in the markets for the past week. The jobbers and wholesalers have been fairly busy, there being a good demand for all lines. Sugar is gradually getting lower in price, while flour and meal show considerable firmness.

SUGAR--The heaviest demand for sugar seems to be over and prices are declining slowly. About ¼c. less is what the refineries are quoting, with sufficient in the hands of local dealers for a week or two. We expect to see still lower prices both in sugars and molasses.

FLOUR—A firmer tone and prospects for a slight advance is the present state of our flour market. There has been a good demand the past week, while stocks of old wheat are getting smaller.

MEAL—The market is nearly bare and without much chance of improvement, as several of our local mills are closed for repairs. The price is holding steady at $3.40 to $3.50.

FISH—Smoked herring are several cents lower than when last quoted. Several cargoes have lately arrived as curers are anxious to sell before any new comes in. Dry cod are without change. Pollock keeps steady at $1.50 to $1.75. Pickled herring are coming in slowly and are in good demand, Bay $1.60 to $1.75 per half bbl, Shelbourne $5.50 to $6 per bbl.

APPLES—Are arriving quite freely from N.S., and reports say the crop will be an average one.

PLUMS—Are high in price and only a limited trade.

POTATOES—Are selling readily at $1 per barrel, with the price not liable to much change.

GRAIN—Beans $1.85 to $2. Peas, green, $1.60 to $1.70. Barley, $4.25 to $4.50 per barrel.

OATMEAL—Rolled, $4.60 to $4.75; standard, $5.35 to $5.60.

CANNED LOBSTERS—Are scarce and high. The new pack have lately been placed on the market at $1.90 to $2.10 per doz.

A MATCH CIRCULAR.

The E. B. Eddy Co. are distributing the following circular to agents:—We send you by concurrent post in "knock down" shape in various colors, specimens of the ¼ gross woodboard boxes in which our No. 1 "Telegraph" matches will henceforth be packed. These boxes are made from very superior woodboard of our own manufacture and are scored, cut and printed on our own machines, are stitched with wire at ends and corners and will be in every respect a thoroughly first class strong package. Each ¼ gross box will contain 36 of our small machine made boxes and as the small boxes and the ¼ gross boxes are made on our own premises and by our own machinery, the regular average count of our No. 1 matches will be substantially exact and can be guaranteed most unreservedly and with the greatest confidence. These ¼ gross boxes will be packed as before in 10 gross cases. The cases will be considerably smaller in size and considerably lighter in weight, but will be of a strength and substantial construction as heretofore. The great advantage in this recent improvement in our packages will be manifest to you and to all. The 10 gross cases will be lighter, easier to handle, occupy less room and cost less to freight. Our ¼ gross match boxes will now rank with the very best grocery shelf goods. We may be able to make some little further improvement in this respect, and shall lose no effort and spare neither pains, time nor money to accomplish this.

The Eclipse grocery store, which was about to be started in Vancouver, has changed hands, the proprietors having decided that groceries were sold at a very small margin in Vancouver, sold their stock to the proprietors of the Ideal Grocery of the same city.

Mr. Watson Eaton, of Watson Eaton & Co., provision and commission merchants, Halifax, who died last week in his 73rd year, had been connected with the business interests of Nova Scotia for half a century and was very widely and favorably known. He met with several reverses, but through the failure of others to meet their obligations. He was generous to a fault and highly respected by his large circle of friends and acquaintances.

Two Chinese capitalists named Chu Lai and Ung Sun, who arrived from Hong Kong on the SS. Empress of Japan, have decided to erect a large salmon cannery on the Fraser River. The cannery will be erected in time to begin packing next year. The Chinese Rice Mill Syndicate, have purchased a site in Vancouver, and the erection of the mill will soon be proceeded with. There are four Chinamen interested, and ample capital has been secured. The intention is to put up a mill of sufficient capacity to supply the whole interior country, instead of being dependent on the Victoria Rice Mill as at present. The raw material will be brought in ships direct from China and as the demand for rice is large the promoters hope to realise handsomely on their investment. It is stated on good authority that the Chinese Government, which has been urged by the Chinese residents for some time to appoint a consul in the province of British Columbia,has at last agreed to do so.

Burglars broke in through the cellar of Mr. A. Taillon's grocery, Montreal, early on Sunday morning. After ransacking the store and taking two caddies of tobbacco, some tins of sardines, chocolate and pencils, one of them picked up a large cheese knife off the counter and in company with his companion, entered the seleeping room of the couple, who were in bed. One of them searched the pocket of Mrs. Tallon's dress and secured $230, while the other held the knife over the couple. Mr. Taillon woke up, but did not stir when he saw the knife. As soon as the burglars had decamped, however, he raised an outcry. The officer in charge of No. 9 police station telephoned to police headquarters for a detective, and James Lafontaine was sent. After going to work he soon secured a clue, and searched a house further down the street, where he found the two caddies of tobacco and John Morgan and Archibald Prentiss, two laborers, in bed. They stated that they had bought the two caddies for twenty-five cents, but a further search of the house revealed, in a cupboard a handkerchief in which was tied up a large quantity of coppers, quarters and five cent pieces. Detective Lafontaine then arrested them, with the assistance of Constables Picard and Butcher, on the charge of being the burglars. Tney were taken to the Central.

CERTIFICATES OF STRENGTH AND PURITY.

OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC ANALYST,

MONTREAL, September 9th, 1887.

To the Canada Sugar Refining Co., Montreal:

GENTLEMEN,—I have personally taken samples from a large stock of your Granulated Sugar, "REDPATH" brand, and carefully tested them by the Polariscope, and I find these samples to be as near to absolute purity as can be obtained by any process of Sugar-Refining.

The test by the Polariscope showed in yesterday's yield 99·90 per cent. of Pure Cane Sugar, which may be considered commercially as ABSOLUTELY PURE SUGAR.

Public Analyst for the District of Montreal, and Professor of Chemistry.

CHEMICAL LABORATORY, MEDICAL FACULTY, MCGILL UNIVERSITY.

MONTREAL, September 9th, 1887.

To the Canada Sugar Refining Company:

GENTLEMEN,—I have taken and tested a sample of your "EXTRA GRANULATED" Sugar, and find that it yielded 99·88 per cent. of Pure Sugar It is practically as pure and good a Sugar as can be manufactured.

Yours truly,

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER issued weekly, subscription price $2.00 per year.

CANADA PREPARED CORN

Has been sold by every respectable grocer in Canada for more than 33 years. The popularity, purity and excellence of Benson's Prepared Corn for Blanc Mange, Infants' Food, etc., and all dietary purposes, has induced some covetous and unprincipled manufacturers to imitate even the color and general appearance of the wrapper, whereby ordinary purchasers may be easily deceived, unless they protect themselves against imposition by examining the package for the old name, "Benson's Canada Prepared Corn." SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

Price-cutting may be prompted by aggressiveness or by self-defence. When the latter is the motive which leads to it, extenuating circumstances may be allowed to moderate the judgment that is pronounced on the general practice. But the difficulty is, that what is an effect becomes in turn a cause, and a cut which begins at one end of the street will run to the other, each addition to the cutting series pleading the irresistible example of his neighbor as his justification. The evil cannot be isolated. No cordon can be drawn around the infected district. One who is forced to price-cutting as a means of holding his own has to do it, but he ought to be sure first that he is forced. He must realize that he is helping on a general pell-mell in local business by the step he is taking to meet prices initiated by a cutting trader. To plunge the whole trade of a town into a state of demoralization is what no clear-headed, scrupulous, substantial business man will help to do unless driven by necessity, which knows no law.

* * * *

The man who is provoked to a contest in price cutting is usually in a position different from that of the trader who brings on the contest in this respect: that the former has everything to lose, the latter everything to gain. The trader who begins a cut usually does so because he lacks customers, and resorts to an attack upon profits as a means of getting customers. His neighbor in the same trade has customers. The lowering of prices on the part of two such dealers is for the purpose of gaining customers on the one hand and that of saving customers on the other. With the one there is no risk, with the other there is the risk of losing his customers. It is this consideration which leads the legitimate, stable trader to take a hand in a cutting game that is inaugurated by his neighbor. He does not want to see his opponent get that which the opponent really needs to make competition a spirited thing between the two, namely, custom. The custom which years of square dealing has attached to the one store must not be let shift to another which makes a single momentary and not over scrupulous effort to get it. Once that custom becomes divided then the advantage of an established connection is lost, and the conditions of rivalry are equalized. To keep his customers a trader must be as adventurous as his rival who lacks customers.

* * * *

The established trader is in a better position than the one who seeks to get himself established. The former can choose between losing his profits or losing his customers. One is likely to be only a temporary loss, the other a more or less permanent one. The customers he must aim to retain. They must not be allowed to go. As long as they are kept there is business being done, and the more there are of them the greater is the quantity by which the small margin is multiplied. A profit, no matter how large, is no good without customers. There is no such thing as profit without customers. It is plain, therefore, that the maintenance of prices in the face of close competition which narrows the margin of profit is an impossibility. Fire must be fought with fire. The main object of self-defence in such a struggle is to suppress the enemy in as short a time as possible. This can be done only by cutting off his supplies, by diverting all the money possible from his store into yours.

* * * *

Dull times often act as an irritant to traders' price-cutting propensities. Such traders may have their share of the business that is going, but they want more. They send round a boy to a competitor to buy a few pounds of currants, or this or that, the boy doing the business in the name of a consumer. The price is noted and immediately a compaign is started with this particular commodity or article as a leader. This is expected to liven up trade. Such an expectation is illogical, as it neglects the consideration that the other man will lower his prices as well, and hold all he held before. It is like the case of the old man who felt that the steps of the stairs he had to climb every night were too far apart. He accordingly laid a piece of two-inch plank on each of them. He didn't take account of the fact, that although each lower step was brought two inches closer to the one above it, the latter was brought two inches farther away. In the same way, the price cutter neglects to notice that though he moves a cent or two closer to the custom of his rival, the latter moves it a cent or two further out of harm's way. Price-cutting is a game, and two can play at it. And the element of bluff is not lacking to it. The man who begins it is usually not hard to outstay, if his antagonist have plenty of heart in him. The price-cutter wins where his opponent's spirits collapse under the worry of the continuous onslaught upon prices. The price-cutter goes to pieces when his opponent cheerfully follows him in every reduction.

THE EXHIBITION.

It needs but continued good weather to make the Industrial Exhibition now in progress the greatest that has yet been held in Toronto. Every year of course is marked by spontaneity on the part of exhibiters, who are moved to ask for space long before the fall yield is a reality. The exhibition is therefore always a full one, but this year it is a richer one, in natural products at all events, than it has been for years. A bounteous crop has been taken safely off, and the pick of field and stall ought to make a fine show this year.

Handiwork, mechanical skill and physical power will do their share, with better heart this year than they have for a long time past, as nothing stimulates the industrial forces like material wealth. Useful arts that are the most remotely connected with natural production, reflect the agricultural prosperity of the year. And there will be a large business done on the grounds. Industries will start when the Exhibition is closed, markets in this and that commodity will open, all because of the demand whose measure will be taken for another year by observers, who are on the ground. The business booked on the ground will undoubtedly be large in many lines. Never, possibly before, was the Industrial Exhibition a better advertisement, not only of the things exhibited, but of the general state of the country. The press cannot have too much to say to spread the fame of it everywhere. It is such accounts that bring immigrants to the country. Reports of the exhibition are worth tons of Christmas Number and Ice Palace literature, as the latter tend to drive people out of the mind to come to Canada, where eternal frost not abundance, seem to be the ruling condition. This year's exhibition is a great note of progress, which needs to be repeated as often as possible and made the most of to repair our census returns. It is not merely a great spectacular effect. It is a great trading occasion. It is a Fair. Men from other countries are here with specimen wares, and to look at specimen wares with a view to exchange with us. Every trader ought to give himself a holiday or two and spend it in the midst of the great throng of sights and people. When in the city old friends or new, will, we hope, find time for a call on THE GROCER.

THE PEDLARS' BY-LAW.

The grocers of the city are not detectives, nor should they have to be informers. The civic authorities have no right to make the grocers the guardians of the by-law which regulates pedlars' traffic on the streets. That by-law is the same as any other. The transgression of it should be almost an impossibility. There is nothing covert about the business done by the pedlars. It is carried on in the light of day, and every pedlar is required to show his badge when asked. Nor is there anything complicated about his privileges, to make it difficult for a policeman to decide whether the man professing to be a pedlar of a certain class of license is or is not such a pedlar. The duty of the police is simple enough in the matter of the pedlars. Why should they be exempt from any obligation to do that duty? It seems to be assumed by the Council, that because the grocers are the most directly concerned in having the peddling trade regulated, the grocers may be depended on to see that the by-law is carried out strictly. But that is a wrong idea. Not only does it put a duty on citizens for which officers are paid, but it tends to establish strife between two particular classes of citizens. The police should be instructed to challenge the pedlar's license in every case where suspicion of irregular trading appears to be reasonably well-grounded.

FARMERS VS. MERCHANTS.

"Observer" writes as follows in last week's Bruce Telescope: I may premise that I am not a merchant, nor are any of my relatives. I have not one cent invested directly or indirectly in storekeeping; my judgment is not swayed by fear of any personal loss or hope of personal gain, but having lived more than half a century in this world, having travelled considerable, read much and mixed with business men of all professions, and in mercantile matters my relations with business men have enabled me to look behind the screens, and I must confess my astonishment that some honest farmers do not use their intelligence but allow "organizers" to dupe them by railing at what they call the monopoly and oppression of the merchants. Take away the fat living from those organizers of 'Patrons of Industry' and the voices of those self sacrificing 'benevolent gentlemen' will be silent about those 'enormous profits' 'crushing combines' of merchants 'grinding the life out of the farmer by their extortion' and one hundred and one et ceteras in the adjective line.

Hunt's Merchants' Magazine—perhaps the most reliable authority upon the subject—published a few years ago mercantile statistics collected for the preceding 50 years from the most accurate sources in America, which showed that out of every hundred persons engaged in mercantile pursuits, ninety were financially ruined; 5 per cent., that is 5 out of each hundred made a mere living, and the other five made an independent fortune. And later than this that 'mercantile prince, the late Senator McDonald of Toronto, than whom a better authority could not be cited published an essay in which he places the successful merchants lower than the above calculation 2½ per cent., I think.

Let any of our intelligent farmers who have lived fifteen or twenty years in this section just run over in his recollection the different persons who during that time have been engaged in mercantile life in Walkerton, and they are many in number, and there is not a single one now in mercantile business here who was in that business twenty years ago, except F. Guggisberg, and ask himself who of those has made a fortune by store keeping—and the echo of his voice will answer "Who?"

I will venture to extend the investigation during the same period to any town or village around us, and the result will be that for every one who has made his fortune in the business more than ninety have failed.

Then dear farmers—let your own observation and common sense teach you rather than listen to some double-barreled orators gasconading the country enriching themselves by duping you into the belief that the merchant who asks more than 12 or 14 per cent. on invoice prices on any goods is robbing you.

Robbery indeed! Merchants would be glad to sell at less than 10 per cent. profit if there were not enormous losses by the miserable credit system or losses by perishable goods, or losses by changing fashions.

A merchant in this town the other day showed me an article of lady's dress in millinery which cost him $3, now out of style, and he is offering it for 25 cents, and he has many other articles upon which he would be glad to realize "cost," yes, one-half of cost if he only could find customers.

If any one should profess to sell all articles to the patrons slightly above cost—then watch and wait and—you will see.

"I speak as to wise men. Judge ye as to what I say."

THE B. C. CANNING CO.

The third ordinary general meeting of the British Columbia Canning Company, Limited, was held at Winchester House London, Eng., recently, under the presidency of Mr. J. H. Brodie, who in addressing the meeting said that the catch of 1890 had been very satisfactory and the directors were able to recommend a very substantial dividend. Their agents who had visited all the canneries reported everything in a most satisfactory condition. They recommended some little improvements, and also advised the purchase of another small property in the Rivers Inlet, which they had agreed to do at a cost for the whole property and improvements of some £250. They had taken up some 1,500 to 2,000 acres of timber land, which has been very judiciously chosen. The sum of £200 was to be expended in building another wharf on the Naas. A new steamer has been purchased for the Skeena. The prospects for the present year were most bright.

A reputation for truthfulness is indispensable to permanent and satisfying success.

TORONTO RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

The September meeting of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association was held on Monday evening in Richmond Hall. It was 20 minutes to 10 before a quorum assembled.

The following members were present: Messrs. Barron, Mills, Gibson, Thackray, Binnie, McCulloch, Sykes, Sinclair, Clarke, Jones, Booth, Williamson.

President Barron was in the chair.

The minutes of last meeting were read, and upon motion of Mr. Mills, seconded by Mr. Clarke, were confirmed.

The only officer absent was one member of the executive committee.

A SICK COMMITTEE.

Mr. Gibson moved, in accordance with a notice of motion given at the July meeting, that the constitution be amended so as to provide for the appointment of a sick visiting committee. Mr. Clarke seconded the motion, which was carried.

Mr. Gibson then moved, seconded by Mr. Mills, that, by virtue of this amendment to the constitution, the president be empowered to nominate monthly three members of the executive committee to serve as sick visiting committee, whose duties shall be to call upon any fellow-member who is laid up, and assist in the management of his business, etc.—Carried.

DELINQUENT OFFICERS.

The notice of motion, given at the July meeting, for the purpose of amending the constitution to enable the Association to deal with cases of continued absence of officers from the monthly meetings, was not acted upon, as it was found that the constitution needed no amending in this respect. A by-law was turned up, which ruled that any office would become vacant at the end of any three consecutive months of absence from the meetings on the part of the person elected to that office.

Mr. Mills moved, seconded by Mr. Jones, that Mr. Donald's attention be called to the article of the constitution relating to the above matter, and that he be informed that some notice of his absence from the meetings has been taken by the Association.—Carried.

NEW MEMBERS.

Mr. Williamson proposed ex-Ald. Booth of Parkdale.

Mr. Gibson proposed Mr. Snow and Mr. Mulqueen.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Mr. John R. McDonald wrote from Sand Point asking for information, by-laws, etc., as a basis on which to establish an association in his district where cutting is rife.

Mr. E. Sutton, Secretary of the London Association, wrote expressing regret that the London grocers had chosen the same day for their pic-nic as the Toronto grocers had for theirs.

Mr. H. T. Barker wrote from Stratford for constitution and other information, organize an association upon.

Mr. W. L. Scott, secretary of the newly ormed Stratford Association, wrote asking for information concerning the handling of dead beats, and whether a secretary should or should not be selected from the trade.

The following letter came from Mr. James Egan the secretary of the St. Thomas Association:

To JOHN F. THACKRAY, ESQ., Toronto.

DEAR SIR,—At our regular meeting Monday, July 27th, resolutions were unanimously passed heartily endorsing the letter which appeared in the CANADIAN GROCER of July 10th, from the Windsor Association, in the stand they have taken against hawkers of tea, etc., and we intend to do all in our power to abate the pedlar nuisance. We also approve of a general convention of retail grocers.

I am, yours truly,

JAMES EGAN, Secy.

Upon the motion of Mr. Clarke, seconded by Mr. Mills, these communications were received.

ACCOUNTS.

An account of $9.75 for rent, and another for $4.66 for postage, etc., to call meetings, were passed upon the motion of Mr. Jones, seconded by Mr. Gibson.

THE PIC-NIC REPORT.

Mr. Mills reported that the pic-nic committee had not met yet and asked that auditors be appointed, so that the whole matter might be closed up at next meeting.

Mr. Clarke, seconded by Mr. Williamson, moved that Mr. Jones and Mr. Mark McMillan be appointed auditors.—Carried.

THE PEDLARS.

Mr. Williamson reported that he and Mr. Mara had called upon the Mayor to urge the thorough enforcement of the pedlars' by-law; that his worship had recommended the placing of the matter before his attention in the form of a letter written by the secretary, asking that more assistance be given Inspector Awde to carry out the by-law. Then the matter of authorizing the police to look after pedlars could be considered by the council and the markets and health committee.

Mr. Gibson objected to more help being given to Inspector Awde. It ought to be the duty of the police without any special by-law. It was thought to be the business of the police to protect all laws. If some despatch were not shown, he would advise that the police commissioners be directly communicated with.

Mr. Clarke felt the new by-law relating to public harangues was identically on the same footing as that relating to pedlars; yet the police did not look idly on at the former being violated.

Mr. Mills moved, seconded by Mr. Williamson, that the secretary be authorized to write to the Mayor to ask that the enforcement of the pedlars' by-law be looked after by the police.—Carried.

THE CONVENTION.

Mr. Mills reported that the committee had considered that common action should be prepared for by a preliminary meeting of the executive committees of leading associations, those of Toronto, Hamilton and London were named, to decide upon questions for discussion. The Hamilton association was written to concerning this proposal, and Hamilton was mentioned as the best place to meet, as it would be a compromise between Toronto and London. The Hamilton body considered the matter and replied, apparently with the idea that Toronto was to be the place of the preliminary meeting. In other respects the Hamilton association was acquiescent.

Mr. Gibson, seconded by Mr. Williamson, moved that the secretary write to the Hamilton Association, asking the latter body to arrange with London what day both can send their executive committees to Toronto, as any day will suit the Toronto Association, provided 24 hours' notice be given.—Carried.

The meeting then adjourned.

NOTES.

President Barron looked well in a new suit, the ample checks of whose tartan pattern needed but the signature of the wearer to make them as good as currency of the realm.

Vice-President Gibson suggests that grocers who consider the present membership fee too high be admitted free, and that a chromo be given to each as a mark of the association's gratitude to them for connecting themselves with it.

Mr. Clarke and Mr. McCulloch were publicly complimented for being the fathers of the babies who took the two best prizes given at the Hamilton pic-nic.

The gentle undertone of Mr. Booth still discoursed of fish taken in Muskoka lakes. His voice fell almost to a whisper as he told how he shrank amid the shrubbery, while from his garments, propped up on stakes, steamed the moisture that the lake had soaked them with when he was in them.

The word "boodle" is getting into the usually undefiled English of Mr. Sykes. "Public service public manners breeds." Mr. Sykes is the witness who gave no evidence before the Public Accounts Committee at Ottawa, and altogether for the reason that he was not a certain other Mr. Sykes.

When the "late treasurer" is spoken of no one thinks for a moment that Mr. Williamson's predecessor in office is meant. The phrase labels a treasurer whose beaming presence is first felt at about 10 p. m.

The mills of the gods grind slowly, but they may be said to have a gait on in comparison with the President's gavel.

The Hamilton Retail Grocers' Association discussed an old grievance on the evening of the 1st inst., that of wholesalers selling to friends, and thus depriving them of business. The practice they say is general, and it has a bad effect upon their trade. A notice of motion that the association formally declare against it was tendered and will come up at the next regular meeting. The subject of giving Christmas presents will also be discussed and the discontinuance of the practice suggested.

IGNORANCE IN REGARD TO TEA.

It is astonishing how few there are in this country, comparatively, whether dealer or consumer, who know anything about the quality and value of tea. In England, when it comes to tea—and they have it there down to a science—it is an exception, and not the rule, when either the seller or purchaser is not fully posted as to both quality and value. But in the United States it is just the reverse, and it is a rare thing when the consumer is able to judge good tea from bad, and it is still rarer when the dealer knows anything about it. As a rule, the consumer is a better judge of tea than the dealer, singular as that may seem; and, what is still more remarkable a better grade of tea for less money can be bought at a gift-enterprise tea store than can be bought from the average grocer. The reason for this latter is, however, obvious, for the man who deals in tea usually knows his business, and, being a competent judge of grades and values, he can, by reason of his knowledge, buy a better article than the average grocer, and for much less money. He can, therefore, well afford to give a cup and saucer, costing six or eight cents, with a sixty cent pound of tea. This is all wrong. It is the grocer who should have the best tea and it is he who should be able to sell it for less profit. The trouble with the grocer is, he pays too little attention to this all important article. If the grocer will give less time to flour and pork, and more to selecting his teas, he will find that he is not only making more money on that article, but is giving general satisfaction to his customers, and constantly adding to his trade. For if a grocer keeps good tea and sells it at a fair price, this, more than all the sugars at cost or below the price cutting generally, will advertise the grocer and prove a profitable trade winner.

The gift enterprise tea store must make large profits, for it all comes out of tea, which must not only yield the proprietor a good profit, but must pay for the crockery and chromos. It is often wondered how it is that these combination stores can continue to do business, multiply and prosper, when the legitimate merchant sometimes finds it a hard matter to make both ends meet. It is all very well to decry these "fake" establishments, as they are called, but there is a good and valid reason why they exist and thrive. It may be a surprise to some, but these gift stores are patronized quite as much by those who care nothing for chromos, etc., as by those who do. It does not take the housewife long to find out where to get a good article of tea, and once satisfied on that score, she will continue to purchase her tea of the man who keeps a good article and sells it at a reasonable price.

The truth of what is here stated will doubtless be called into question, but it is nevertheless a fact, It is the experience of a great many others. As may be supposed, this is not written in the interest of the gift enterprise store, but for the sake of the grocer. Let this be a note of warning to those who need it, and there are thousands of grocers throughout this country who do need such advice. The only remedy the grocer has in the premises, and one that he can speedily apply with profit, is to make purchases of tea from those only who understand their business and who conduct that business in an honest and legitimate manner. Steer clear of the impostor who would delude you into believing that he has "great bargains in teas, etc." It is these fakes and manipulators of grades and prices who are, after all, the ones to blame for the wretchedly trashy stuff on the market that is sold under the guise of "the very best." Let the grocer make a specialty of his teas, and he need not fear the "competition" of his price-cutting neighbor at the next corner.—Grocers' Monthly Review.

CONSTANTLY IMPROVE YOUR BUSINESS.

Those merchants who have usually succeeded in business the best are those who are constantly making improvements in some branch of their business. It is a kind of religion with them that it is practically impossible for any business to stand still. If it does not progress and develop and increase in strength, it will in some way or other deteriorate. They believe that a business cannot possibly be at a complete standstill, but must go either up or down hill. These men are ever watchful, always on the alert for something that will in some way or other improve their business. They will make changes which at first appear trivial, but which will lead on to developments that were never dreamed of when the first improvement was thought of. It is to small beginnings as a rule that the large businesses owe so much. Trivial matters of detail which are attended to in a proper manner always result satisfactorily.

Merchants in this particular matter can learn a great deal from modern inventors, some of whom will spend an infinite amount of time simply to perfect a most trivial part of a machine. Yet the development of that trivial part is absolutely necessary for the perfect success of the invention. An old inventor, speaking upon this matter not very long ago, said that there was no such thing as a perfect machine; all were capable of improvement; and it is this improvement that sometimes, although small, works a revolution in some branch of business. The old marine steam engines of fifteen years ago are to-day practically useless. No such developments in marine architecture or such great strides in marine transportation as has been perfected in recent years was possible under the old system, yet it was but a very small matter that worked this great transformation. The next step will be no doubt quite as trivial as the last one, yet it may just turn the point that will make it produce even greater results than the last invention. Such men as Edison have worked upon an apparently trivial matter for years, yet when the result has been accomplished it has produced a complete revolution. The little piece of bamboo in the incandescent light made that practical and made electricity an agreeable and pleasant light, although perhaps not quite so economical as could be wished.

If merchants would carefully study their business in the light which inventors do they would be able to make very rapid progress in developing their business. We once knew a grocery store that for ten years did not vary its receipts probably ten dollars a week. The man who owned it and worked it was just able to make a living. He was saving no money, but just managed by dint of hard work and economy to keep his head above water. New blood was imparted into the firm, but the suggestions made were for a long time resolutely opposed by the principal, who maintained that the cost of business satisfied him for the last twenty years, it ought to be perfectly satisfactory to everybody else concerned. By dint of perseverance and by a constant placing of various schemes and ideas, the new blood ultimately made his influence felt. The first concession that was granted, we understand, was to have the window dressed in a certain manner, leaving out some things perhaps that had occupied the same position for ten years, only being removed in order to be cleaned. The result of the change was at once felt upon the business, and it was so satisfactory that the old gentleman put on one side much of his conservatism and allowed the younger one a little more free scope. Changes came in rapid succession until the old man almost became scared, but seeing that each one of them resulted in a satisfactory manner, was compelled by force of circumstances to withdraw his opposition to anything proposed, until one day the younger one proposed to take out the entire front of the store and put in a new one at an expenditure of some $2,500. A little opposition was forthcoming at first, but this was gradually withdrawn and consent for the alteration granted. The result was the finest store of its kind in that city and beyond question the finest business. It grew within a space of five years from an annual turn-over of say $5,000 to one of $150,000. The illustration is a good one, and it is founded on fact. At the same time there are scores of other similar illustrations, but they do not come within our personal knowledge.

"Constantly improve your business." Is there no means by which you can improve your business? Is there not some little change that, could be made which would be an improvement on the present methods in vogue? Can you reasonably suggest any to yourself? You ought to be able to, and if you can satisfy yourself that they will be profitable lose no time whatever in their adoption. There is no knowing what you can do if you only set about it in a right spirit and in a proper manner. It may be sometimes bad policy to let well enough alone, but always try in doing so to do better by "constantly improving your business."—National Grocer.

ENTERPRISE.

It is the enterprising business man who succeeds, and the application of the term to a merchant is about as high a compliment as a newspaper man can pay him, hence the common use of the word in newspaper columns in notices of local business men. Yet, how few men deserve to be called enterprising. The word means: "Bold or forward to undertake; resolute, active, or prompt to attempt." We question whether ten per cent. of the retail tradesmen of even this pushing, active nation deserve the appellation, for the majority are too much inclined to jog along in well-marked ruts, never attempting anything novel, but waiting instead for some enterprising dealer to make a trial of new goods or new business methods. Enterprise will redeem many shortcomings and mistakes in business. Even if loss does attend the introduction of some special article or of some new way of attracting public attention, it is sure to be more than balanced by successes with other articles and other methods. That enterprise is quite a rare quality in many branches of the retail trade becomes obvious in a brief glance at the advertising pages of any country newspaper. It would seem, as a writer in one of the magazines for this month observes, that the general run of country merchants feel that enterprise in advertising is a violation of modesty, hence when they do contract for space in their local journal, it is not utilized as it should be, their announcements being so seldom changed that oftentimes winter goods are advertised in the early part of the summer, and vice versa. They are apt to look upon the shrewd dealer who does properly utilize his newspaper space as a sensational, theatric sort of fellow who violates all the canons of good taste, but the chances are ten to one that they will in time follow his example in advertising and in other respects. But in the meantime the exceptional dealer catches the bulk of the trade, even if his business methods do at times savor of the circus and the peripatetic tooth-powder and quack medicine vendors. It is at the store of the enterprising dealer that novelties are to be had some time before less sagacious rivals gather sufficient courage to put them in stock, and these make trade, besides paying good profits, for when certain goods are only to be got at one establishment in a town the public is forced to patronize it, and the proprietor is enabled to obtain any price in reason.

When a dealer continually bewails the dulness of trade, he may be set down, without much chance of one's going astray, as lacking in enterprise, for the enterprising merchant is too busily employed in devising means of stimulating trade, and in carrying them out, to find time for complaints on that score. When all has been accomplished that can be in the direction of advertising, and in securing tempting novelties, the enterprising dealer directs his attention to the improvement of his service, to the renovation of the store and the arrangement of goods. Or, more correctly speaking, we should say that he has all of these things in view continually, and the work in each direction is carried on at the same time. Necessarily his time is too much occupied for complaints of dull times to be heard from him. To put the elements of business success in brief, the famous saying of the French revolutionist, Danton, may be paraphrased: Enterprise; enterprise; always enterprise.—Merchants' Review.

DON'T DEPEND ON LUCK.

There is too much of a tendency among people to ascribe the success or failure in life to the caprice or partiality of fortune. Whether one succeeds or fails an explanation is always ready that the condition is due to luck. Luck to such people seems everything, and a man's endeavors to improve amount to nothing unless the wheel of fortune throws in his path that which by no possibility he could earn. Observation shows that these devotees of the luck system make it an excuse for their indolence and non-progressiveness. In their superficial manner of looking at events they have neglected those obvious conditions which a more close examination would have revealed as the true cause of any person's condition.

Thus two young men may start in life with apparently equal abilities and prospects. One will succeed in amassing a competence, while the other barely manages, as the saying is, to keep soul and body together. If the course of life followed by these two men is closely studied, the result to which each has come will be seen to be due to the effort, or lack of effort, shown by each, and there would be no recourse to luck to explain the difference in their conditions. It will probably be found that one valued present ease and pleasure too much to make any sacrifice for the future; he lived only for the good each day might bring him. As time passed and he compared his condition with that of the other man, then it was that his failure was laid to luck, and the success of the other to the same convenient term.

While there may be many strange events in men's lives, which seem to need chance as an explanation, it will generally be found that each individual has been the arbiter of his own fortune. It is a failing of human nature to shift responsibility upon others; and from the time of the man who said the woman did it, down to the present, the same sort of excuse is rendered. And in the moral world the same scapegoat system is practiced, and many a sin is laid to the devil by those who need not go outside of themselves for the true source; they desire to do bad deeds, but did not care to shoulder the responsibility. No doubt thousands of people pass through life dissatisfied with themselves and blaming fate for what they themselves are responsible for.—St. Louis Grocer.

EXCESSIVE COAL OIL STOCK.

Before the Hamilton police magistrate on the 1st inst., Constable Hunter prosecuted Andrew Watson, who has a shop on King William street, for a violation of the fire by-law in having more than sixty barrels of oil on his premises. The constable said he found two barrels of benzine; fifty-six barrels of coal oil were stored on the ground and twenty-nine barrels were above them.

Lawyer Carscallen asked to have the case adjourned as the City Council had passed a resolution recommending that the markets, fire and police committee consider the advisability of amending the by-law allowing eighty-five instead of sixty barrels to be stored. "I don't know," said he, "if the committee will accept the suggestion. The dealers say sixty brarels is a car load."

The magistrate—I will fine him now, because if an accident occurs I will be blamed for not enforcing the law.

Lawyer Carscallen—I ask you not to do that until you see what the committee will do.

The magistrate fined the defendant $20, which will not be enforced if the committee amends the by-law.

SAGE ADVICE TO DEALERS.

The live wide-awake merchant does not buy all his goods from traveling salesmen, but visits the large jobbing markets at least twice a year. Wisely these western merchants pursue this policy, and they are already beginning to pay their autumn visit prior to fall trade in larger number, perhaps, than ever before to the Minneapolis and St. Paul jobbing houses. It is useful and beneficial, both to the retail merchant and to the jobber, that the former should visit the house where he does most of his buying. Personal intercourse establishes trade relations on a firmer and more intelligent basis, and more consideration, other things being equal, is likely to be shown from each to each, when personal acquaintance is a factor. The chances for undue exactions and unfortunate misunderstandings are largely eliminated by such intercourse. We are glad to note that the northwestern merchants are recognizing the truth of these statements and that their visits each year are becoming so much more numerous. There is another factor which ought not to be ignored in this matter and that is that the retail merchant buys to better advantage (we do not refer so much to prices as to some other features of buying), when he buys directly in the house, and it is a duty that the buyer owes not only to himself but to those who give him credit that he should buy to the best of his ability. —Ex.

Every line of goods embodies a history and a cience worth years of study to understand.

The trader who pays his way must sell at a profit, and cannot afford to cut below others in the same line.

ABSOLUTISM IN BUSINESS.

There is a growing tendency towards what might be termed mechanical absolutism in business methods, due no doubt to the difficulties of managing large mercantile enterprises properly in all their details. The purchasing public becomes painfully aware of this fact through daily contact with salesmen and clerks of all sorts. While we do not wish to enter the unlimited, though by no means unpopulated or unpopular field of the social analyst, we do wish to point out a danger to the best interests of the merchant, which though indefinitely felt by the public, is apt to escape notice in the strenuous efforts to obtain invariable rules for testing the honesty and efficiency of clerks. As to honesty, it is sufficient to say that though the honest clerk is more than willing that a check should be kept on his transactions, the devices for obviating the risks employers must take in this direction are far from having a desirable effect on the integrity of employes as a class.

Regarding the efficiency or worth of a clerk the method of judging it almost entirely by the columns of the salesbook is in almost every store an unjust and, therefore, an injurious one. To divide the bulk of necessary labor and the stock in such a manner as to make it strictly equitable for all employes is practically impossible. The evils of partial adoption of some very good methods and the lack of perfect methods can, we think, be best shown by a few illustrations.

A large general store adopts the system of sale-slips and cashier. Each clerk has a number and puts the amount of sale on the slips, without the cost of the goods, under his number as salesman. There is an endless amount of work to be performed which cannot be made to show on the salesbook. Clerk 1 shirks all such work and put his energies entirely into the line of making sales. Clerk 2 feels the responsibilities of his position and has the interests of the firm at heart. One morning the coal oil tank is empty; there are five barrels of oil to be brought in and emptied into the tank. Clerk 2 takes it upon himself to do this job, which work temporarily unfits him to act as salesman. Clerk 1 meanwhile receives the coming customers and gets their respective orders. The person who buys the empty oil barrels comes in and pays Clerk 1 for the five. Clerk 2 has worked for two hours without getting a sale while Clerk 1 has been raking in the cash and swelling his sales amount.

Again, goods are to be sold strictly at one price. Clerk 1 wishes to make a good showing. Clerk 2 wishes to be conscientious. Clerk 1 offers a slight cut on some staple, induces the customer to buy a larger amount and gets larger sales, while clerk 2 finds customers shunning him because he enforces the one price rule.

Clerk 1 makes strenuous efforts to sell staples, which while they amount to large sums bear little or no profit, while clerk 2 puts in his work in selling fancy goods, sells a smaller amount but makes more money for the firm.

These are only a few of the actual occurrences having a bearing on the question in hand. Other difficulties are the attempts on the part of forward clerks to take more orders than they can fill properly; to neglect customers known to buy small quantities for those known to buy largely, or those buying nicknacks for those buying staples.

Of course all of these differences in the character and methods of employes are bound to create more or less friction and ill-feeling, some of which must react on the customer to the detriment of the firm. The larger and more complicated the business becomes and the farther removed the heads of firms are from the purchasers of goods, the more these difficulties multiply and the more unmanageable they become.

It is on these lines that the efforts of large firms must be expended and it is also on these lines that the smaller dealers must grasp what few advantages there remains for them over the ever growing concentration of business.—Ex.

AN EASY METHOD OF BECOMING RICH.

Andrew Jackson's Tennessee friend who, according to "Old Hickory's" statement to James Buchanan, "made a large fortune by minding his own business," offers an example of a method of successful accumulation which deserves more general imitation. It is not to be supposed, of course, that the Tennessee capitalist who was so indifferent to other folk's affairs had no other talents; he was, we dare say, a sharp, shrewd man of business. While his competitor on the other corner was nosing around early in the morning on his Paul Pry errand, he was employed in fixing up his stock or posting his books before getting ready for business. This business, we are justified in believing, grew to such an extent as to become the marvel of the neighborhood, and even attracted the attention of the President of the United States. Few men of business who make it their policy to push their own trade and let their neighbor's affairs alone can expect their virtues to become a matter of historical record, as have those of the Tennessean, but that they will thereby in a majority of cases, at least, attain prosperity, there can be little question. The chief object, no doubt, the merchant has in view who devotes much of his time to prying into the affairs of his competitors in trade, is to secure points to be used to the supposed disadvantage of the latter with customers and friends. We have known of such, whose satisfaction in finding out a bit of scandal to be used in this manner was greater than that felt in selling a good bill of goods. Such men make the mistake of supposing that throwing mud at a rival builds up their own business at his expense, when, in fact, the result is always just the reverse. The social reformer who is widely traduced suddenly becomes famous and finds abuse the best aid to success. So the business man whose rivals make him the object of special attention and unfavorable comment, may safely regard this not only as a confession of their failure, but as a tribute to the abilities of their more successful competitors.—Grocer and Country Merchant.

DISCOUNTS AND UNDERSELLING.

After long and careful thought we do not understand how men are to be helped out of difficulties into which they have deliberately thrown themselves, and for reasons that still exist, and will continue to exist for a longer period than we can define, except by an entire alteration of conduct. The competition of business men has been widely lauded as the producer of all kinds of trade excellence, economy, and civility; but, of course, there are drawbacks on the other side, especially when the contest has been keen, the capital unequally distributed, and recklessness has entered the arena. Underselling of all kinds is a product of Competition and it is only reasonable, therefore, to argue, that if the product is of such a growing character that it has at length run away with all the profits, that Combination shouldbe resorted to as the antidote. Traders in antagonism bring out each other's pluck, endurance, energy, skill, ingenuity, etc., the consumers getting side benefits in the shape of lower prices and greater civility; but traders in antagonism know no mercy, and so they kill each other, the weak going to the wall, and the stronger living only as before, all the resultant profits being given away to the almighty public.

Combination alone, faithful and true, will hold the fort safely.

We have heard very much lately about the evils of the Discount System, and all kinds of remedies are proposed, many of which seem to us unsuitable. If retailers choose to give away all or nearly all their profits to purchasers of their goods, whatever these goods may be, we cannot understand what it has to do with the men who sell to the retailers, nor why they should be asked or presume to act as judges or umpires by charging higher prices to reduce the profits of retailers, and compel them to keep up their prices to the public (i. e., filching from Peter and Paul may be the gainer.) Nor do we know by what right the wholesale house or manufacturer, having once sold his goods, is deemed to have a voice in deciding what profit shall be placed on them by the retailer; nor that it should be asked that the large purchaser be charged exactly on the same scale as the smaller purchaser. These are each in contravention of sound principles; is, in fact, doing evil that good may come,—which it probably never will in such a connection.

NEAT CLERKS.

How many are there? If we were to answer this question we should say that there are fewer neat grocery clerks than there ought to be. Indeed, a neat grocery clerk is to our mind an exception, even in the largest and best regulated stores they have their shortcomings. To a great extent the responsibility of this condition of affairs lies entirely with the owner. But why should there not be many more of them! It would make the store much brighter and increase the confidence of the customers and help matters along generally. We know very well that the average grocery clerk has a pretty hard time of it. He has to get up early in the morning in a city like this, and as a rule is in the store between 5 and 6 o'clock, it does not give him time certainly to prepare his toilet, and when he has to work until 9 o'clock at night his ambition is perhaps not what it ought to be. There are, however, grocery stores which open at reasonable hours and close early, and it is in these where the reform should begin. We know of one grocery store which employs in the neighborhood of fifty clerks. Of course it is a fine grocery store, where there is no fruit or vegetables sold, and the owner made up his mind that the clerks should always appear neat and clean. In summer time he supplies each clerk with a clean white shirt three times a week and pays for the washing of their white aprons, a clean one being necessary every morning. In winter time a short black jacket is supplied, and we must confess that the store, so far as the clerks are concerned, is a picture of cleanliness and neatness. The first thing in the morning the clerks look like a company of soldiers on dress parade, and when the expense and the trouble is considered it is a very trivial matter when the result is taken into consideration.

What looks worse than entering a grocery store and seeing the clerks with dirty shoes, dirty aprons and dirty shirts and faces that have not been either shaved or washed for a week, and we must confess that we have seen some stores of which this would be a fair description of the clerks to be found in them? Possibly some excuse might be given for their conduct if it were not for the fact that all grocery stores sell soap, and water as a rule is by no means an expensive luxury. Our inquisitiveness was once aroused by a clerk in a small grocery store which we had need to enter very often. He very seldom had an apron on and his boots were always in a deplorable condition. We asked him if he sold blacking and he said yes, and in reply to a further question of which was the best there came over his face an innocent grin, for our eyes were directed at his boots when we asked the question, and he was honest enough to confess his ignorance upon the point at issue. Our point had been gained and we advised him to use a little blacking as it might improve the wearing capacity of his shoes.

A little attention in the direction of neatness amongst clerks would certainly add considerable attractiveness to the stores. We are sure that the results would amply repay any expense or extra effort necessary in the matter.

APPRECIATE YOUR BUSINESSS.

That man is a poor specimen of enterprise who runs down his own business and wishes he had never gone into it. We heard a mechanic say: "If I had a boy he should never learn my trade; it is the poorest way of making a living there is, and anything else is better." The chances are that he was a poor workman and vented his spite by cursing his employment. The day's labor was regarded as a task, and the hours spent in his shop as so many robbers of his liberty.

The same is true of a merchant who despises his honorable calling. Nothing in all secular employment has furnished nobler examples of intellectual vigor, honorable success and useful life than the vocation of a merchant, and any man should be proud to be in it. No business has done more to create the civilization of the age and oil the wheels of the world's progress.

King Solomon, the wisest man of ancient history, was a merchant on the reciprocity plan, with Hiram King of Tyre, who thought he could make a good bargain. He is said to have cleared about $120,000,000 on a single investment, but his family expenses were heavy and he needed large profits. He imported timber from the Tyrians; linen yarn, horses and chariots from Egypt; exported wheat, barley, wine and oil; and we venture to say he never spoke ill of his business, king that he was.

What class of men have given more for schools, colleges, hospitals and general charities than the merchants of England and America? The pedigrees of kings do not furnish their equals. Why, then, should anyone in such good company have a contempt for it? What would the country be without merchants? In fifty years the world would drift back into barbarism.

Brother storekeepers, put a high value on your position. Hold up its honor, its integrity, its business principles. The community in which you live have a right to expect it of you, and take a pride in seeing you meet their expectations.—Mixed Stocks.

On the Skeena river and at Rivers inlet the canners have good cause to grumble at the curious freaks of the salmon. Only a few days ago the salmon stopped running, so the canneries were shut down and the fishermen paid off. Now, just after the men have left the river, the fish have commenced to run again, and in large numbers. If the fishermen had not left the river, the packs of the different canneries could be greatly increased. They have been having splendid weather in the north.—Vaucouver World, Aug. 23rd.

A recent number of THE CANADIAN GROCER contains a half tone plate, giving an interior view of the grocery store of Mr. Robert Barron, Yonge street, Toronto. Between one and four o'clock Sunday morning, the 30th ult., some unknown persons entered the stores of Messrs. Hockin & Pool, and D. E. MacDiarmid & Co., of Dutton, Ont. They first entered MacDiarmid's store through the back window and some $3 or $4 were taken. The safe was badly used up, but they failed to make an entrance. They then entered Hockin's store through the cellar door by cutting a hole through and pulling out the cross bar. They obtained $5 from Hockin's, but did not touch the safe. It is said the safe contained $700.

The sugar ship Tobique, which left the Phillipine Islands on April 8th with a cargo of sugar for the St. Lawrence sugar refinery, is aground at Hochelaga. Owing to the absence of the buoy, the pilot lost his reckoning, failed to bring the ship far enough up the stream, and in making his turn too soon ran the ship on her broadside just about 500 feet off the end of the pier. There she stuck fast. Three tugs have since been trying to move her, but all to no purpose. Lighters are alongside of her and the cargo is being taken off.

This year Messrs. Hatheway & Co., of Boston, have purchased the greater quantity of the total pack of Westmorland county, and are the largest importers of lobsters in Boston. This year they imported 30,000 cases of 70 pounds each. The other day, through the working of the McKinley bill, they paid $1,312 duty on a recent importation from Halifax. The Boston Herald in speaking of this says: "The firm does not loose this money. It will still continue to make a profit, and whenever it is necessary to make explanations in regard to the rise in price the only answer that can be given is the 'McKinley Bill.' Nearly all these goods go to the West where McKinley lives and in the south. New England people eat their lobsters within 24 hours after they are alive, but those who buy the canned article can get no other.—Moncton (N. B.,) Times.

Mr. W. Boulter, the proprietor of the Bay of Quinte Canning Factory, Picton, Ont., and president of the Canadian Packers' Association, has just returned from an extended trip through Manitoba. From personal observation obtained by driving through several large wheat growing sections, he is of the opinion that very little damage has been done to the wheat crop by the frost, and that the crop is one not only the largest, but of the best quality ever grown in Manitoba. Business is booming among the wholesale grocers, and larger importations are now being made by them and others in general trade. The above is what Mr. Boulter told our reporter, who had the pleasure of his company east from Winnipeg. It was an amusing sight to look into his stateroom on board the Athabaska, on the upper lakes, and see the large sheaf of wheat and other samples that was given him by the general agent of the N.P.R.R., at Winnipeg, Capt. H. Swinford. These were off the various fields throughout the province where he had personally inspected. Mr. Boulter is a good traveling companion, and our representative looks forward to the pleasure of meeting him on such an occasion again.

The business of the late firm will be continued as a going concern under the old firm name so long as is consistent with the proper winding up of same, with power to myself to make such purchases of staple goods as in my opinion may be necessary to carry on the business. The creditors will be paid proportionately and rateably out of funds coming into my hands, and at such time as I have sufficient funds on hand to make a dividend. You will oblige by furnishing me with a complete statement of the firm's indebtedness to you up to the date hereof.

TORONTO, Sept. 10, 1891.

GROCERIES.

The sale of groceries increases with each week's business. Trade is plainly well started on the upward movement towards fall activity. The week's report records a strong demand for sugar, a fair rate of activity in the tea trade, delay in the receipts of canned goods, the arrival of the first new Valencia raisins. The city has not yet been visited by many traders from the country. Their calls on the wholesalers during the Exhibition are not usually in the way of business, but to renew friendly relations with acquaintances among representatives and principals. When the Exhibition is in full blast trade may be expected to drop into the background temporarily, and to show little activity in any but local business.

CANNED GOODS.

There is a moderately good demand for canned goods. Peas are selling at $1.12½ to $1.15, and a considerable amount of business has been done in them. Corn and tomatoes of the new pack are just beginning to arrive, and are wanted. There is a demand for tomatoes, for which the supply is inadequate. The old pack is out and the new pack is just beginning to come in. The crop matures slowly, which keeps packing operations very backward. The packers report great difficulty in getting stock. Salmon quote from $1.35 upwards. Later reports from France confirm those received some time ago as to the failure of the sardine fishery. This year's fishing is the worst on record. At some points there are no fish, at others few, and where there are any they are large, averaging sizes that are unsuitable to this market. An advance of 25 per cent. has taken place in the primary market. Good quality Portuguese sardines are advanced in sympathy with French prices.

Smith & Keighley and Sloan & Crowther received shipments of new canned tomatoes, on Monday, from Boulton & Sons, Picton, Ont. The latter wholesale grocery house have also received new tomatoes from the Lakeport cannery.

Sloan & Crowther received on Tuesday the invoice of the first car of corn of the new pack to reach this market.

A sample of the Delhi company's new season's peach jam in glass has been received by R. S. McIndoe, the local representative of that firm.

There were 200 cases lobsters from Glace bay, on the schooner J. L. Crossley which sank at her wharf in the great hurricane at Halifax on Tuesday.

The following is the latest estimate of the B. C. Salmon pack: Naas River, 10,000 cases; Skeena River, 75,000 cases; Lowe Inlet, Gardiner's Inlet and Alert Bay, 8,000 cases; Rivers Inlet, 35,000 cases; and Fraser River, 140,000 cases, making a total of 268,000 cases which shows, at the last, a shortage of 150,000 cases from last years pack.—B. C. Commercial Journal.

COFFEE.

There is no new feature in the demand for coffee, which continues equable at the prices reported a week ago. The range of Mochas and Javas is complete, but fine grades of Rios are still in low stock. The latter are 21 to 23c., Java 27 to 32c. and Mocha 29 to 35c.

DRIED FRUIT.

The pace of trade cannot be said to have appreciably quickened or slackened since last week. It is pretty much the same now as it was then. Valencia raisins have been selling rather freely at the easy prices ruling, that is 4 to 5c. There is a considerable volume of old stock unsold as the new comes in. The first arrival of new was on Wednesday, when part of the indirect shipment by way of Liverpool came in ex S.S. Sardinian. Currants are very firm and scarce at 6¼ to 6½c. for provincials in barrels. Houses along the street are helping one another out with orders. Prunes are quiet at 6½c. upwards. Sultana raisins are getting into small compass. There are indications that the present prices, 14½ to 16c., will be advanced and the market bare before new Sultanas arrive.

J. L. Watt & Scott have received samples of new crop provincial currants. They show a better than average quality.

The first shipment of currants via Liverpool is about three weeks on the way. The first direct shipment to Canadian importers loaded at Patras a week ago. The quality on the whole is reported to be below that of last year. This week the same vessel touches at Denia for the first direct shipment of Valencias.

The currants to arrive by the first direct steamer have not been bought freely, as buyers look for lower prices. On the other hand, the market at Patras has advanced during the last few days, and this has further restricted sales.

Prunes of the new crop are not attracting local attention very much yet, as they do not arrive till about the 1st of October.

NUTS.

A small amount of interest is kept up in the nut trade. There is no new local feature to note. Cocoanuts are in at $5.50.

Quotations for new filberts are very high, the crop being reported to be only about half of that of last year.

McAndrews & Co., Taragona, cable quotations on soft shell almonds at the same figure as for the corresponding date of last year. The crop this year is larger.

RICE AND SPICES.

Rice stocks are at last in a condition to stand a good demand. Canadian milled Japan is plentiful and selling at a lively rate at 4¾ to 5c. Other descriptions are also in request. Spices show some little activity above the average common place movement, as fall culinary operations are beginning. There is no change in price.

SUGAR.

Sugar has had another good week of it. There is a repetition in a mild way of the July rush for stock, the abundance of plums, etc., giving a strong impulse to the trade. Some large deals in sugar have taken place between local wholesale houses and refiners. The prices of granulated are still 5 to 5⅛c. Yellows appear to be somewhat firmer, as offers upon a bearish basis made have been declined at the refineries more frequently than they were last week. The prices for yellows quote still at 3¾c. upwards. Raws are in considerable request at 3½ to 4½c. Trinidad and Demerara standing at the two extremes of the scale of quality and value.

Willett & Gray in their weekly report of the New York sugar market, says: Raws—The market was quiet during the early part of the week, and has only shown its strong condition plainly towards the close, when holders are rewarded for their patience by an increased demand at very full prices. The statistical position is now such, that no matter how long buyers withdraw from the market, they find just the same difficulties in making parchases at concessions as have existed at any time for the past two months. It is not unlikely that an advance on present quotations may be scored before the new crops are available for use. The European markets are also inclined to be firmer again. Refined—"Actions speak louder than words," and no better confirmation of harmony among refiners is needed than is shown by the course of the refined market during the week and its ending at 1-16c. above its opening. The steadiness and improving tendency of it have given more confidence to buyers than has existed for a long time, and the rasult is that the refined market is very firm at the advance, and buyers do not fear a letting down of prices on them just as soon as they purchase freely. The indications from all parts of the country point to the fact that the anticipated increase of consumption of sugar is being more than realized. It is evident that the people spend just as much money for sugar as ever, but, of course, get a third more sugar for the same money.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

Syrups are somewhat firmer since the disappearance of the bulk of the Vancouver stock sold here some time ago at easy prices. Dark non-branded syrups are selling very well at 2½ to 2⅝c. Molasses are very quiet, with no change in prices to note.

TEAS.

A fair business in low grade blacks is being transacted between brokers and jobbers. The lowest values received are from 15 to 16c. Japans are receiving some attention at about 16 to 18c., the former being the lowest price available. Young Hysons are going well, but are in few hands and in limited range of quality. There is little good stock below 20c.

The demand for Indian teas is improving, and shipments of the new season's teas are arriving. The demand continues chiefly for medium Pekoes. In London for all the better liquoring descriptions competition continues strong, and good new season's teas are in active demand at advancing rates. Amongst the most desirable invoices offering those from the Jokai Co., Ld., commanded the best attention, the teas from their "Hukanpukri" Division realizing exceptionally high prices, and as much as 4s. 8d. per lb. was paid for a fair-sized parcel. Private advices from Calcutta state: There was improved demand for all descriptions at last auction, and values had a hardening tendency. There was a revival of the enquiry from Bombay, and suitable teas in many instances advanced ¼ to ½c. an anna. A large proportion of low grade Pekoe Souchongs and leafy brokens was taken for the colonies.

The Produce Markets' Review says: At the auctions 12,436 packages of Congou were offered without reserve, including some two or three breaks of fine Ningchows, which realized poor prices compared with those which could have been obtained on arrival. The demand, however, for this class of tea from the home trade is small, Kintucks being much preferred, and, owing probably to the considerable fall which has taken place in the value of the rouble, there is not at present much demand for Ningchows from the Russian market. An improvement, however, is probable later in the season, as prices here are now considerably lower than those paid in China by Russian buyers. Fine Kintucks, although not much in request at the moment, appear to be more desirable stock to hold than Ningchows, as the former are undoubtedly of better quality than has been seen for some years past, and most of the export orders lately received have been for Kintucks. Following the advance which has recently taken place in the terminal market, common grades, both of red and black leaf, are firm, although the amount of business transacted has not been large. Souchongs have been quite neglected, as the imports of this season are generally inferior to those of last year. New-make Congous are fairly plentiful, and sell at previous rates.

MARKET NOTES.

Sago has gone up 2s. a long cwt. in England, which is equivalent to about ½c. here. Tapioca is also firmer. Both have been very low here for a long time.

Mr. Bowlby, of the Waterford Cannery, was in the city on Tuesday.

Mr. Matthews, of the Lakeport canning house, was on the street early in the week.

Two or three wholesale grocery houses continued to close at 5 until the end of the week in which the agreement terminated, but as their example was not followed by others, they fell in with the latter and now all close at 6.

Mr. Smylie, of Young & Smylie, licorice manufacturers, Brooklyn, N.Y., was in the city on Saturday.

PETROLEUM.

Prices are firmer but not changed in quotation. A better business is being transacted.

The Petrolia Advertiser reports: Petrolia crude $1.35 per bbl. Oil Springs crude $1.35 per bbl. The market in both crude and refined remain about the same as last week viz: $1.35 for crude, with very little offering at that figure. From this out we expect to see crude gradually ascend to at least a dollar forty, if not one-forty-five, particularly if no large spouters are struck in the meantime. The production, which is steadily on the increase, is we are happy to say, not of that character to cause uneasiness as to another half-a-million surplus being on our hands.

Refined keeps as formerly, 9½ to 10 cents in car lots, while it takes 12½ to 13 cents to purchase the best refined article in barrels, f. o. b. here, less two per cent. off for cash.

DRUGS AND CHEMICALS.

No material change is observable in the drug market. Business is but moderately active in seasonable lines. Prices are steady and unchanged.

S. W. Royse & Co., Manchester, in their latest report say: Speaking generally there is little animation in the Chemical Trade at present. In some articles there is a tendency to a lower level of prices; consumers are therefore only buying these goods in comparatively small quantities. On the other hand the prices of some articles have fallen considerably and are now so low that advances may at any time take place, and this is more evinced by the steadier tone in prices that have recently prevailed; buyers therefore would do well to watch carefully the market for such articles. A fair enquiry exists for Caustic Soda, Soda Ash, and Soda Crystals chiefly for the northern markets: there is little change in the home demand. The advance in Bleaching Powder is bringing more buyers forward. Acetate of Lime continues quiet at old rates, but freights from America may at any time cause a rapid rise in price on this side. There is considerable more enquiry for Sulphate of Copper for forward delivery, but buyers are only disposed to pay moderate premiums on present rates. Green Copperas is also experiencing better demand at unchanged prices. Acetate of Soda maintains the improvement recorded in our last report. Sulphate of Ammonia closes steady with a tendency upwards, and Prussiate of Potash rather slower of sale and slightly weaker. An effort is being made to advance White Sugar of Lead but so far consumers are not responding. A strong demand continues for Miscible Naptha at full rates. Consumers are keeping full stocks of Bichromates of Soda and Potash anticipating a sudden advance.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

The signs of improvement noted some time ago in the butter market are being gradually confirmed by the facts of current trade. In a local way the demand has been greatly enlarged by the returning summer holidayers and the influx of visitors to the exhibition. The export demand has at last got down to business, and taken off eight or ten carloads of dairy tub from the west at prices running from 12½ to 13½c. Butter bought at the upper figure ranked as choice. This outward movement has cleared up a great many country store stocks. It seems reasonable to suppose that buying for a foreign market will continue on as good terms as those of the transactions noted, and probably upon better terms. Activity in a smaller way has not been wanting. Shipments in 25 and 50 tub lots have been made quite often to both western and eastern points. Good dairy tub is wanted, and extra stock is valued at 15 to 16c., with 14 to 15c. for choice and 11½ to 13c. for medium. The distance between buyers and sellers is narrowing, and the former are closing up more of the internal than the latter are.

Cheese is firm at 10c. for August and other summer makes. Half creams are 9c.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

BEANS—Are about nominal at $1.70 to $1.80.

DRIED APPLES—Are 7½ to 8c. and lifeless.

EVAPORATED APPLES—Are 13½ to 14c. and not in demand at all.

EGGS—Are firmer and higher, quoting now at 13½ to 14c. The exhibition has given strength to the market.

HAY—Buyers cannot induce supplies to come faster at present prices, namely, $11 to $12. Street supplies are increasing at $13 to $16 for timothy.

HIDES—Are unchanged at 5 to 5½c. for No. 1 green and 6⅛c. for cured. A car was sold at the latter price on Monday.

HONEY—Is abundant, dull and weak at 7 to 10c. for strained, and 14 to 16c. for sections.

HOPS—The market is in a transition state. New crop hops have not got well into the market, and their value will not be a settled matter till the English crop is harvested. Also the brewers' demand will not be an actual influence for some weeks yet. Yearlings quote at 25c., and new would brobably be worth about 30c., though as yet the latter are nominal.

POTATOES—Are in liberal receipt at 50 to 60c. a bag. Carloads are talked of at 40c.

SKINS—Are unchanged at 60c. for sheep, and 5 to 7c. for calf.

STRAW—Is becoming more plentiful at $6 to $7.

WOOL—Varies in no respect. It is as plentiful and weak as ever. Fleeces are 10c.

FISH.

Trade is looking up somewhat with cooler weather and the exhaustion of small fruits. Stocks are in a good condition, and the local demand is quite strong. Whitefish, salmon trout and pickerel are 6½ to 7c. Lake herring are $1.75 to $2.

FRUITS.

Peaches are becoming plentiful but are in strong demand at $1 to $1.25 for Crawfords and 75c. to $1 for others. Bartlett pears are $4 to $4.75 per barrel. Apples are $1.75 to $2.75. Plums are very abundant at 30 to 75c. a basket. Water melons are freer in arrival at 15 to 20c., muskmelons at $3.75 to $4.50 per barrel. Tomatoes are 20 to 25c. a basket. The fruit of the egg plant from Merritt's fruit farm at St. Catharines is in and selling at 25c. Grapes are quoted at the following prices for dark: 2½ to 3c. for Champions, 6 to 7c. for More's Early. Jessica, a light grape, is 4 to 5c.

GREEN FRUIT.

A fair amount of business is reported at prices in the main stationary at last week's points of quotation. There are no Palermo lemons. Messinas are $4.50 to $5.50. Maoris are $6.50 to $8. Valencia oranges are almost, if not quite, out of stock. Sorrentos are $3.75 to $4.50. Jamaicas are in fuller stock at $8 to $8.50. Bananas are $1 to $1.50. Sweet potatoes are becoming plentiful at $3.50 to $4.

PROVISIONS.

Activity still characterizes the trade in provisions. As well as a smart jobbing trade there has been a good deal of business in car lots. Prices are very firm.

BACON—Long clear is 8½c. Two cars were sold on Monday upon private terms, but at outside prices. Several other cars changed hands during the week. Smoked bellies are 10½ to 11c., backs 11c., and rolls 9c.

HAMS—A car of pickled was sold on Monday on private terms, but at no concession. In a jobbing way the price is 11 to 11½c. Smoked are 12½ to 13c., firm and becoming scarce.

LARD—The supply of pure is kept from becoming exhausted by current slaughter in a small way. The price is 10¼ to 10¾c. Compound is 8½ to 9c.

MESS PORK—is quiet at $15 to $15.50 for heavy and $16 to $17 for short cut.

DRESSED HOGS—A carload arrived towards the endof last week. The hogs showed light feeding, and it is probable the regular fall run of supplies will be somewhat late in beginning. The price is $7.

SALT.

Trade is satisfactory. The movement of it may be gauged from the record of the following one day's sales made by the Toronto salt works: 2,000 sacks of coarse at 68c., 3 cars of barrels at $1.20, 1 car of fine sacks at 85c. and 2 cars of dairy at $1.25.

DRY GOODS.

The dry goods men are now in the thick of business. The millinery openings inaugurated a very bright spell, which the exhibition appears to have helped along rather than hindered. A good fall is anticipated. No notable changes are reported.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Sept. 10, 1891.

There are several gratifying features to note this week, from which importers and jobbers generally agree that there will be a good movement this fall. This is but natural, if the continued reports regarding the tea conditions are not the greatest fa sehoods on record, for they have been encouraging all along. Anyhow, importers and large dealers, generally, report a better demand from jobbers for the various staples, both for prompt and future delivery, which may be taken to mean that orders on the latter are satisfactory. Sugar is actively called for, and the same applies to tea and coffee, the latter being very firm, while spices which have been dull all along show an improving tendency. The same may be said of dried fruit, the active call for currants almost exhausting present stocks on spot, while there is a good enquiry for future delivery. In fact, generally speaking, the week presents a greatly improved aspect as far as the grocery market is concerned.

SUGAR, ETC.

The sugar market has continued an active one for all descriptions. Yellows have shown a somewhat easier tendency, but this increased the call and prices are steady, especially as the New York market shows more firmness. Business in this description of stock has been at 3¾ or thereabouts, while granulated rules steady at 4⅝c. per lb. For raw stock importers report an improved inquiry. sales of low grades having been made in fair sized lots, at 3⅜ to 3½ and finer descriptions at 3⅝ to 3¾.

There is only a fair sort of trade doing in syrups with prices steady 2¾ to 3¼c. per lb.

MOLASSES.

This article is quiet, but the market has a better feeling than formerly. Stocks here are rather small, and with comparatively low prices at the moment it does not seem likely that values will descend. We quote Barbadoes 37 to 38c.

TEAS.

Teas have had a fair enquiry since our last, and the demand was quite equal to the supply. In fact that business was not so large in the aggregate was due to the light supplies. Japan stock worth from 14½ to 15½c. sold well in a round way.

COFFEE AND SPICES.

There is no weakness apparent in coffee, which has manifested a strong tone for some time back. In fact supplies continue light and are just about sufficient to fill current wants at the moment. Prices therefore are firm and business in Rios transpires at 20 to 20½, and Jamaicas 19½ to 20½ according to quality.

Spices which have been dull and easy latterly show an improved feeling under a better demand.

RICE.

The rate competition among some of the jobbing houses, to which previous reference has been made, has induced a more active market on this article, and the demand at the moment being good. We quote: Patna, $4.50 to $5; choice, $4.25 to $4.50; standard, $3.90, and off grades, $3.50 in car lots.

DRIED FRUIT.

Business in dried fruit has shown a noticeable improvement during the week. This is especially the case with currants which have found an active enquiry on Western account for prompt shipment sufficient to almost exhaust stock at present here. The business has all been on a basis of 6⅛c., and no holder would agree to any concession upon this, figure for stock ex store. In addition to this, good business has been done on new crop to arrive on a range of 6 to 6⅛c. Advices from primary markets report a large proportion of the crop as damaged and in bad condition. For Valencia raisins spot business has not been active but values show an easier tendency abroad. Opening prices on the goods were 21s 6d f. o.b., and now they stand at 17s. f. o. b. via. Liverpool. By the direct steamers, although some are quoting prices, none of the reliable importers, have as far as can be learned, quoted prices at Denia yet.

CANNED GOODS.

There is but little doing in a jobbing way in canned goods, but considerable contracting is being done. The tomato crop promises large and orders are being taken freely for the best brands at 97½c. Salmon is gaining strength. Some brands which were offering at $1.12½ a fortnight ago have been withdrawn in consequence of heavy shipments from the coast on English account.

GREEN FRUIT.

There is no change in staple lines of this description. Business is well maintained of a jobbing kind, and oranges and lemons show no change.

FRESH FRUIT.

There is a seasonable enquiry for fresh fruit of all kinds with no particular change to mention. California pears sell at $3.50,

Brantford New Mills.

plums $1.50, grapes $1.75 to $2, and nectarines $1.50. Other fruit are about the same. Bartlet pears rule at $3 to $3.50 per barrel and 50 to 75c. per basket, Clapp pears $4 to $4.50 per barrel, plums 40 to 75c, and peaches 75c. to $1.25 do., white grapes are 4½ to 5c.

APPLES.

There is little to say about apples as yet for beyond the usual reports customary to the opening of the season there is little on which to base an opinion. A letter from the representative of a well-known exporting house,here who is now making a trip through Ontario and other sections, is worthy of mention. This gentleman opines that the prospects for a profitable shipping season this year are small just at present. He learns that 50c. has been paid for the sample fruit which would mean about $1.60 on the cars, and says that there will be more apples in Canada this year available for shipment than ever before. In Maine also he calculates that the crop of Baldwins will be large.

HOPS.

Nothing definite can be said about the hop market as regards new crop. We have already noted that sales of Palmers have been made at 32c., but the buyers seem to think that prices will come very much lower, and have as encouragement that prices which mean a concession on the above have been accepted, for a small lot of course, but still a fact is a fact.

PROVISIONS.

With the approach of the fall months there has been some improvement to the provision market, but it is not very appreciable as yet. However there is more demand for short cut and large which have considerable attention at present. Prices rule steady. Canadian short cut, per barrel is quoted at $17.00 to $17.25; mess pork, western, per barrel $15.25 to $15.75; short cut, western, per brl $17.00 to $17.25; hams, city cured, per pound 10½ to 11½c.; hams, canvassed, per lb 0 00 to 0 00c.; lard, Canadian, in pails, 8¾ to 9c.; bacon, per pound, 9 to 10c.; lard, com., refined, per lb, 7¾ to 8c.

EGGS.

The local demand for eggs is small at present while the receipts are large. Still the demand on export account is a factor and sufficient at the moment to keep the market fairly steady. Prices. though, are lower than at the time of our last. We quote 12c. to 13c.

BUTTER.

This market shows a very shady tone the demand on export account being fair and it would be larger if prices were not held so high. For August creamery holders are asking extreme figures but at 20¼ to 20½ a fair business is possible and those holders who are willing to accept are cleaning out. In western dairy buyers in the West seem to have another scare on for they are reported to be paying 15c. there. On spot, this is on outside,and as holders want it in the country business is restricted, Finest creamery 20 to 20¼c., finest townships 16 to 17c., finest western 14½ to 15c.

CHEESE.

It is a stand off between English buyers and Ganadian sellers. Speculative operations have forced values up altogether too high, and now the market drops. At 9¾ to 9⅞c. there is a chance for business, but holders don't seem disposed to talk on this basis hence the market is dull. Finest Brockville, etc., 9¾ to 9⅞c., finest Eastern and States 9⅝ to 9¾c., fine 9 to 9¼c., medium 8½ to 8⅞c., cable 46s.

GRAIN.

There is no activity in this market, business ruling very quiet. The stocks in store compared with those of a week ago, show an increase of 47,330 bushels of wheat, 10,515 bushels of oats, 3,224 bushels of rye, and a decrease of 9,773 bushels of corn, 1,514 bushels of peas, and 6,609 bushels of barley. Compared with the corresponding date last year there is an increase of 256,353 bushels of wheat, 570 bushels of corn, 1,313 bushels of peas, 7,536 bushels of rye, and a decrease of 1,655 bushels of oats, 22,142 bushels of barley. We quote:—No. 2 hard Manitoba, $1.05 to $1.07; No. 3 do., 97c ; No. 2 Northern, $1.04, peas 81c. per 66 pounds in store; 83c. afloat; oats, 35 to 36c. per 34 pounds; corn, 80 to 82c. duty paid; feed barley, 55c.; good malting do., nominal.

FLOUR.

There is no activity to speak of in flour, a quiet business moving on local account at steady prices. In fact holders are still firm, although buyers are calculating on better terms with new wheat stock. The stock in store shows an increase of 1,523 barrels compared with a week ago, and 4,870 barrels compared with a year ago. Patent spring $5.35 to $5.75, patent winter $5.25 to $5.55, straight roller $4.85 to $5.00, extra $4.60 to $4.70, superfine $4.20 to $4.30, city strong bakers' $0.00 to $5.50, strong bakers' $0.00 to $5.25.

HALIFAX MARKET QUOTATIONS.

(Wholesale Selling Rates.)

HALIFAX, Sept. 9, 1891.

BREADSTUFFS.—Markets remain much the same, some mills asking $9 for good 90 per cent. patents at mill, to which must be added 35 to 90c. freght. Exporters are taking wheat at about $1 per bushel. We make very few changes in quotations.

Manitoba highest grade patents, $6.00 to 6.25 ; High grade patents, $5.30 to 5.50 ; Good 90 per cent Patents, $5.20 to 5.50 ; Straight grade, $5.00 to 5.10 ; Superior extras, $4.75 to 4.85 ; Good seconds, $4.40 to 4.55 ; Graham flour, $4.90 to 5.10 ; Oatmeal, $5.50 to 5.60 ; Oatmeal rolled $5.70 to 5.80 ; Kiln dried corn meal, $3.60 to 3.70 ; Rolled wheat, $5.50 ; Wheat bran per ton, $18.50 to 19.50 ; Middlings, $27.50 to $28.50 ; Cracked corn, $39.00 ; Moulee, $30.00 ; Split Peas $4.40 to $4.50 ; White beans per bushel, $1.80 to 1.90 ; Pot Barley per bbl, $3.90 to $4.10 ; Canadian oats choice quality, 53c. to 55 ; P. E. I. Oats 46c. to 48.

SUGAR.—The demand for sugar here has not been large during the week, as retailers are pretty well stocked up, but a good fair business is reported in both granulated and yellows at steady unchanged prices.

Cut loaf,5½c.; Granulated, 4⅝ to 4¾.; Circle A, 4½c. ; White extra C, 4¼c. ; Standard, 3¾c. to 3⅞c; Extra yellow C, 3⅛c. ; Yellow C, 3⅝c. to 3¾c.

MOLASSES.—The market for molasses,here, has been very dull, and no change in any respect has been developed.

Barbados, 40c. ; Demerara, 35 to 38c. ; Diamond N. 48c. ; Porto Rico, 37 to 38c.; Trinidad, 34 to 35c. ; Antigua, 34 to 35.

FISH.—We have no change to note in the position of fish in this market, which continues to be lifeless and devoid of any interesting features.

Codfish, Hard C.B., $4.75, ex vessel; Western shore, $4.50.

ST. JOHN, N. B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N.B., Sept. 7, 1891.

It is too early for much improvement in business, though all our wholesale houses are kept fairly busy filling orders and preparing for the fall trade.

CHEESE—The reported shortage in cheese has caused quite an advance in that article, and with only a limited quantity here the price is likely to rule high for some time ; 10¼ to 10½c. is the ruling price now.

BUTTER—Butter is in good demand and the quantity offering is not large, though in quality is quite up to the standard. It ranges in price from 15 to 18c.

FLOUR—There has been a steady demand for flour, and as what is held is mostly old wheat, it has advanced some with a good prospect of holding firm for some weeks. Medium patents $5.30 to $5.45, high grade $5.55 to $5.60, Manitoba $6 to $6.05.

CORN MEAL—Is in good demand at ruling prices $3.40 to $3.50.

OATMEAL—Roller is selling at $5.60 to $5.70, standard $5.40 to $5.50.

SUGARS—Are without life, with a tendancy downward.

MOLASSES—The quantity is less than is usually held, with a limited demand. Barbadoes is quoted at 36 to 38c.

FISH—We have had a good demand for all lines of fish. Dry cod, medium, are selling at $3.70 to $4., and large at $4.35 to $4.50. Pollock sell readily at $1.65 to $1.75. Herring, smoked, cargo arrived last week, which were sold at 9 to 10c. Pickled, a few cargoes of Shelburn have lately been placed on the market, and are selling at $4.50 to $4.75.

EXPORTS IN TIN PLATE PACKAGES.

CHRISTIANIA, Aug. 24, 1891.

To the Editor of THE CANADIAN GROCER.
Toronto.

DEAR SIR,—In THE CANADIAN GROCER of July 31st there is on page 2 a very interesting article headed: "An Export Trade in Canned Goods." You there show how the U.S. canners are handicapped by a duty on tin plate of 2 1-5c. per lb. We have had some experience in regard to this, and fully appreciate the truthfulness of your statement in that article, as we represent one of the largest biscuit factories in the U.S. and a house that should be able to compete with English houses in this market, but on account of the duty on tin plate their biscuits are more expensive. This is what they write us: "Although the prices charged, we think, are in some instances dearer than the English, the quality of the goods will be in all respects as good, if not better. However, on packages such as tins and boxes the English will compare more favorably than ours, for the reason that there is no duty upon the tin in England, and consequently tins can be made from 25 to 40 % cheaper there than in this country." We have mentioned this as we thought it might interest you to know that U.S. houses are openly admitting that duty on tin plates makes it difficult for them to compete where that article is needed.

Yours respectfully,
C. E. SONTUM,
of C. E. Sontum & Co., Christiania, Norway.

NOTES TAKEN ON THE ROAD.

Messrs. Elliott. Marr & Co., wholesale grocers, London, have removed to the large commodious premises lately occupied by Struthers, Anderson & Co., Waterloo block, where their facilities for handling their steadily increasing business are much increased.

Mr. A. Archibald, late clerk with Wm. Mitchell, grocer, Hamilton, has bought an interest in the business of his employer, with prospect of shortly being sole proprietor. The GROCER wishes him every success, and predicts that close adherance to the many good points found in this journal the goal of his ambition will soon be reached.

LOST WITHOUT IT.

F. W. Kirkham, general merchant, Walter's Falls, writes as follows: The present address of my GROCER is West Hill. Please change it to Walter's Falls, Ont. Have not seen a copy of my own GROCER for six weeks, and am lost without it. Be sure and send next copy to me.

SELL GOOD GOODS.

We believe it is a fact that the most successful retail grocers are the ones who sell goods of a high quality, and certain it is that such a policy has everything to command it. While fine quality goods may cost a little more to the consumer, this fact is more than counterbalanced by the satisfaction of the buyer, and by the fact that such goods go further under the management of the housewife than do cheap goods.

And the dealer in fine goods is not slow to educate his customers to the fact that high priced goods are cheaper in the end than low priced ones. It does not take much argument to show that a pound of pure pepper is worth much more to the consumer than a pound of cheap trash, and there is a long list of articles of which the same statement is true.

In canned goods especially it is important to handle only a good quality, and such can be sold at profitable prices. Nothing disgusts a customer more quickly than to cut a can of some article, say salmon, and find it scarcely fit to be eaten, let alone its repulsive appearance. Not only is the grocer apt to lose a customer by selling such stuff, but he injures the trade in canned salmon at the same time. When a customer is certain of good butter, good tea, good coffee, etc., he will stick to such a store even if prices are sometimes higher. The grocer who deals in fine goods rarely has trouble with customers; there is no sending back of articles, and no fault finding about quality. It is the right method of doing business.—St. Louis Grocer.

CERTIFICATES OF STRENGTH AND PURITY.

OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC ANALYST,

MONTREAL, September 9th, 1887.

To the Canada Sugar Refining Co., Montreal:

GENTLEMEN,—I have personally taken samples from a large stock of your Granulated Sugar, "REDPATH" brand, and carefully tested them by the Polariscope, and I find these samples to be as near to absolute purity as can be obtained by any process of Sugar-Refining.

The test by the Polariscope showed in yesterday's yield 99·90 per cent. of Pure Cane Sugar, which may be considered commercially as ABSOLUTELY PURE SUGAR.

CHEMICAL LABORATORY, MEDICAL FACULTY, McGILL UNIVERSITY.

MONTREAL, September 9th, 1887.

To the Canada Sugar Refining Company:

GENTLEMEN,—I have taken and tested a sample of your "EXTRA GRANULATED" Sugar, and find that it yielded 99·88 per cent. of Pure Sugar It is practically as pure and good a Sugar as can be manufactured.

Yours truly,

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER issued weekly, subscription price $2.00 per year.

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

OUR FALL NUMBER.

The Fall Number of THE GROCER will be issued this year on the second of October. We have ventured a much larger outlay upon it than upon any other special issue we have yet got out, and believe our readers will justly pronounce it the finest fall number that has appeared in this country. It will be bound in a handsome lithographed cover. Its pages will be ornamented with cuts, on which alone a large amount has been expended. Every grocer and general merchant in Canada will receive a copy. It is a grand opportunity for advertisers, as the attractiveness, timeliness and wide circulation of the issue afford the very finest auspices under which an advertisement can be sent forth. The paper goes out at the moment when the country is in the first flush of large hopes fully realized, and when the disposition to trade is apt to be most generous. Advertisers, enlarge your space.

The German government has at last raised the embargo on United States pork ; the American hog is no longer a forbidden animal in the Kaiser's dominions. The dread of trichinosis has had to make way for other considerations, chief among which was the necessity of obtaining a market for German beet sugar. On and after the first of next January the President of the United States will have power to suspend the provisions of the McKinley Tariff Act relating to free sugar produced in countries which impose what seems to him an excessive duty on United States products of any class. The hint that the President might use this power in the case of German beet sugar was probably given. The consciousness that such a power existed was the only new element in the German view of the situation, and was certainly the most persuasive. All the other considerations had been urged again and again before, but failed to moderate the strictness of the prohibition. Now the arrangement is that hogs and hog products from the United States are admissible into Germany upon the same terms of duty as hogs and hog products from any other country, and the President of the United States is not to impose a duty on German beet sugar.

* * * *

The production of beet sugar is a huge industry in Germany, and hog-raising is a huge industry in the United States. What may be deemed an equal reciprocal arrangement has probably been effected. The German government had followed the policy of allowing bounties on all sugar exported and thus had fostered an enormous industry. It could not afford to lose any of the markets it had, and its sugar, paying a duty, would be unable to hold its own in competition with that of countries whose sugar went into the United States market free. The loss of the United States market would be disastrous to Germany. On the other hand, the United States could not make the most of its great natural facilities for producing pork, if the many millions of consumers in the German empire were not to be turned to account as part of the demand. It was important that United States pork should be put on the same customs footing as other pork.

Canada is concerned in this arangement. Our hogs were not shut out of the German market, but that was of little moment, as we are not raising hogs for export yet. But the fact that United States hogs were shut out from Germany acted as a hindrance to the development of the hog-raising industry in this country. Here we were beside a country whose cornfields teemed yearly with cheap food for many millions of hogs. The very numbers fed depressed the market, and the cost of production here made it impossible to compete with United States prices before the change in our duty, which gave needed protection to our own growers and revived a waning industry. This year the corn crop in the Western States will be enormous, Western hogs will be produced in myriads, and Canadians must view with satisfaction the enlargement of the foreign market for them. As long as the German demand was muzzled the overflow into this market would be greater than if all Europe were open to the producers of cheap hogs. A greatly enlarged market will probably act as an offset to a big yield of corn, and prices will probably rule at values encouraging to the native grower and packer. The re-opening of German ports to United states pork cannot be otherwise than healthy for the Canadian hog-raising and attendant industries. Before the prohibition was imposed by Germany, that country paid about $10,000,000 a year to the United States shippers for pork. If the German trade should be worth that now it would give a momentum to the current of trade alongside of us, that would render impossible any such flushes of stock upon this market at prices that are the despair of our own producers. It is unlikely that German consumption will be altogether unreserved at once, as suspicions of trichinosis may act as a check, but the fact that United States pork is so much more cheaply produced than that in European countries will be apt to tell against prejudice or mistrust. It is to be hoped, at all events, that Canada will reap a very substantial benefit from the arrangement between Germany and the United States.

A DEARTH OF FRUIT JARS.

Another consequence of the cheapness of sugar and the abundance of fruit is a shortage in fruit jars. Receipts of sugar were scarcely more behindhand when the first fruits came in than has been the supply of jars to meet the demands for putting up the second fruits. The crop of berries, currants and cherries that came in in July called for nearly all the jars in the country. When peaches, plums and pears came in there was consequently little glassware suitable for putting them up. The retailers have had to scour the sources of supply to get enough stock to satisfy the pressing wants of their customers. Traders had to buy from each other to tide over intervals when jars could not be furnished by the manufacturers. The dealers in old material to whom in spring people leaving the city usually bring their empties, were able to dispose of all they could get hold of at good prices. The supply manufactured here this year was entirely inadequate. Nor could we replenish supplies readily by drawing on the United States. We did import some jars but the United States market was in the same state as ours. There it is said, as many jars were sold in the last six months as were sold in the previous six years. Added to the same causes as are operative here, are the strikes in western glass furnaces of the United States. Prices advanced 50 per cent. in that country. A Boston dealer is reported by the New England Grocer to have found an argument for the reform in the tariff on jars, in the fact that the factories of Canada would have sent their jars in to supply the American market during the shortage but for the 40 per cent duty on glass preserve jars and the cost of transportation, which kept them out, leaving the Pennsylvania manufacturers free to control the markets. But the Canadian manufacturers had no stock to offer outside, as all they could put on this market found ready sale.

The scarcity of sugar in July and the scarcity of fruit jars in September have appreciably limited the quantity of fruit put up, though more has been put up this year than ever before in Canada. The price of fruit has consequently been slightly affected by these circumstances, and would have ruled somewhat higher on an average than it has ruled, if sugar and jars had been ready to hand when wanted.

If sugar should be equally cheap and fruit equally plentiful next year it will not follow that an equally strong demand will be experienced by the trade and manufacturers for fruit jars. The jars of one year will come in for service the next year, and partly because of this fact and because of the almost unvarying level of fruit preserving for years, the demand for jars had got to be comparatively small before this year. It may possibly be as well for the trade to keep in mind for next summer the fact that there are a good many jars now in the households of the people.

AT THE EXHIBITION.

The Exhibition may be pronounced a success from every point of view. It was crowded with attractions and thronged with spectators every day. The exhibits were such as might be looked for in a yearly developing institution ; they illustrated progress not only in an industrial way but also in the art of display. Each exhibitor apparently vied as much with his own efforts at past fairs as with those of his fellow-exhibitors at this. So many students of effect could not fail to make a beautifully diversified spectacle. Some of the exhibits have been made special mention of below.

THE COWAN COCOA AND CHOCOLATE CO. (LTD.)—The display of their manufacture, in the main building, showed to advantage. These goods are making headway among the trade.

GLOBE TOBACCO CO.—If a neat showing of tobaccos will tempt men to try goods, the smokers and chewers of our country will be asking for Globe tobacco. Samples were given out to the public, and should have an increased sale in the future.

IRELAND'S NATIONAL FOODS—Ireland's National Foods always strike the ladies' eye. These goods are on sale everywhere now. There was enough in their pile on the ground floor of the main building to feed a good many families.

DICK, RIDOUT & CO.—In displaying their bags in the Annex also showed special designs of trade marks of some of the best millers in the country, showing just where they sell their goods.

LAKE OF THE WOODS MILLING CO.—This company has built an old-time mill in the centre of their exhibit. around which was piled sacks of their flour.

TORONTO SALT WORKS—Just to the left of the entrance to the Annex this company had some fine specimens of rock salt, also a display of their package and log salt, which should be on sale at all grocery stores.

EDWARDSBURG STARCH CO.—To the left of the front entrance of the main building, the Edwardsburg Starch Co. made a great hit with their show of all kinds of starch, put up in their various forms.

B. F. BABBITT—Had boys dressed as pages in blue and white silk clothes, giving away samples of their soap and soap powder. They looked very pretty and a good many families will be trying these goods after the fair.

OGILVIE'S FLOUR—Was there in piles in all shapes, also photos of the manufacturers' different mills, and one of Mr. A. W. Ogilvie, as well as some medals they had won at the different exhibitions where they showed their goods.

PURE GOLD MANUFACTURING CO.—The phonograph these people had at their exhibit for the public to listen to the praises of Pure Gold goods, was in constant use. The idea was a good one, and together with the display of goods kept the place crowded with sight seers.

SINCLAIR, HOOD & CO.—Baking powder, spices, extracts, coffees, etc., in just-so sort of piles, could not helpcausing the west end of the main building to be thronged. This firm made a pretty exhibit.

WALTER BAKER & CO.—This was one of the most attractive of the many displays Whether the ladies who gave out the chocolate, in neat china cups, or the goods themselves, were the attraction of everybody who entered the main building would be hard to say. These ladies dressed as their trade mark, in costumes of cocoa girls, were exceedingly pretty. Mr. Williams who had charge of the exhibit, was kept busy, with the merchants who called at the counter.

PELEE ISLAND WINE CO.—J. S. Hamilton & Co., Brampton, Ont., agents for these wines, showed all kinds of their manufacture.

D. W. MCLAREN & CO.—Who were next to the above exhibitors, with Mr. McLaren in charge, were on the corner to catch the eye of the passer by. Such staple goods as these are always praised by both consumers and traders.

BARM YEAST CO.—Gave thousands of cakes away of their celebrated yeast at the exhibition this year, as they did last. The company not only say they have a good thing but like to have others know it, and take this way of advertising to the public.

ADAMS' TUTTI FRUITTI—Was on sale at every other stand on the grounds. These goods are very popular among gum chewers.

BANSDORP'S ROYAL DUTCH GOCOA—Put up in round tins with yellow labels, and served out to the visitors in china cups, drew crowds of people anxious to do sampling. Thousands drank at the counter free, and all went away with praises for "Bensdrop."

SURPRISE SOAP—Made at St. Stephen, N.B., by the St. Croix Soap Co., who are well known as original advertisers. The manufacturers had an immense bar of soap on exhibit, and gave out tickets on which the public were entitled to a free guess at the weight of the same. A prize of $200 will be given to the nearest guesser. More will be said about this later.

THE NATIONAL CASH REGISTER was heard clicking from many parts of the building. Careful and shrewd business men are all getting a cash register and the national seems the favorite in the race.

MORGAN'S SAPOLIO—A trial order of these goods always calls for a repeat.

ROYAL FRUIT GUM—C. T. Heisel, of Cleveland, Ohio, and of Toronto, had a stand of their own to display and sell their gum. This is put up in neat and handy boxes and is a good seller.

R. & T. WATSON'S candies had ready sale. On children's day all the little ones' spare coppers went for Watson's candies, and for those who were out late that evening Watson's cough drops.

W. A. BRADSHAW & CO.—These people had a very tasty array of "Ammonia Soap." Large blocks of the article were piled in artistic shape, and made a very pretty sight.

A CHEERY WORD.

GELERT, Sept. 7, 1891.

To the Editor CANADIAN GROCER.

SIR,—I have great pleasure in renewing my subscription to THE GROCER. The articles upon bookkeeping have been worth more to me than the cost of the paper for the year. I had the pleasure of meeting their author the other day, and if country storekeepers would follow the lines he lays down we should greatly profit by doing so. Your first article on Sept. 4th is well worth reading and studying. It is all truth, as I know to my cost. Reading your paper has convinced me that the safest business is a cash business, and I have taken that stand some few months ago, and intend to keep to it. The curse of a country store is credit and bad butter. We give the one and take the other, much to the detriment of our noses and pockets. Any grocer who does not take your paper is behind the times and is to be pitied. May you have every success.

Yours truly,

J. W. WATSON

A LETTER FROM REGINA.

REGINA, N.W.T., Can., Sept. 10, 1891.

Editor CANADIAN GROCER.

SIR,—We send you a sample of this year's wheat. There are millions of bushels round Regina, and the only thing we want now is a buyer. There are no buyers in this town. Last year there was just one buyer for wheat, and the farmers not only got a very poor price (some sold at 25 to 35 cents a bushel), but what they did get was trade, not cash, and that trade was at high prices. They got less than 40 per cent. from those small prices. We are badly in need of a few buyers of wheat with capital, and the country will be all right. Those buyers could make money. We have the whole trade of the German settlers, which are about 400, and they all have wheat. We were requested to write for buyers, or for some commission house for whom we could buy, and as we have no acquaintance down East we thought it advisable to write to you. If you would place it in your paper, which has so many readers, it might be of some use. We expect a number of new German settlers at the end of this month. One other thing we want, is a wholesale grocery business, which is needed here very much, as there is none from Winnipeg to Vancouver. A house like that could make good business here.

Respectfully yours,

BERKMAN & BENNETT.

[The sample of wheat enclosed was a handful of very fine goose wheat. We commend the letter of our correspondent to those who contemplate investing money in either grain or the wholesale grocery business.—ED.]

DUTY ON CANNED GOODS PACKAGES IN THE UNITED STATES.

PICTON, Sept. 11, 1891.

Editor CANADIAN GROCER.

SIR,—In a communication in the GROCER of Sept. 11th, page 20, we find a misstatement—that the U. S. canners are handicapped by the duty on tin plate. The following from U. S. Custom Law of 1890 shows that the American exporters are not handicapped to the extent that C. E. Sontum, Esq., has been led to believe, nor which your article of July 31st stated. Paragraph 328: There shall be allowed on the imported tin plate used in the manufacture of cans, boxes, packages and all articles of tinware exported either empty or filled with domestic products, a drawback equal to the duty paid on such tin plate less one per centum of such duty, which shall be retained for the use of the United States.

Yours sincerely,

CENTURY.

["Century" is correct, and we thank him for calling our attention to the oversight of the drawback.—ED.]

CHATHAM RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

CHATHAM, Sept. 8th, 1891.

The Chatham Retail Grocers' Association held their regular meeting at 2 p.m. in their rooms in Heyward's block. It was very largely attended. John McCorvie, Esq., president, was in the chair. Under the head of new business, Mr. Heyward very ably pointed out the necessity of the pedlars paying a license fee that they may sell their goods upon equal basis. Messrs. Weaver, Holden and others also made a few remarks in favor of petitioning the council to pass a by-law to compel pedlars to pay license.

Moved by Mr. Dunlop, seconded by Mr. Spashett, that Messrs. Heyward, Smythe, and the president, be a committee, with power to add to their number, to draft a petition to present to the council at its next meeting.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Holden, seconded by Mr. Spashett, that the association recommend to the council the rates of fees just read by Mr. Heyward from an old number of THE CANADIAN GROCER.—Carried.

At this point Mr. Weaver explained the necessity of a deputation to attend the council, as the members of the council may wish to hear from them.

Moved by Mr. Singer, seconded by Mr. Pearson, that the committee named be a deputation to wait on the council at its next meeting.

After a few remarks, in the interest of the association, the meeting adjourned at 4 p.m.

MARKING UP, A PROBLEM FOR STORE-KEEPERS.

One of the hardest problems numerous retailers have to contend with, says J. M. Batchelor in a contemporary is when the price of goods they may have on hand has risen to a considerable figure in excess of that paid to jobbers, whether such rise should be at once taken advantage of to mark up the stock; or if it would be more expedient to sell at old prices, and thus cut under the figures of rivals, who not having a stock on hand are obliged to buy at higher rates.

Many stores have taken either one attitude or another on this large issue, and do not care to hear any suggestions, while others, particularly new traders, are totally in the dark regarding what course is the more expedient to pursue.

A moment's reflection over a few well known facts will quickly expose the advantages of marking up goods in accordance with the change in the market. At least inform every customer of the rise in values among the manufacturers or jobbers, and then if it be decided to sell at old figures, give the customers positive knowledge of the great bargains thus offered, and treat such sales as bargains, and do not class them with regular transactions, for they are not regular; instead they are deductions from actual values.

The advantages of at once marking up goods on hand, under such circumstances are, that if you make a concession in values to customers, it is best to make them comprehend the fact; and if you sell at the newer market values, they in a spirit of fairness cannot complain when they are told that new goods cost so much more.

It is a rule when the jobbing price declines, to at once mark down the stocks on hand, to prevent being undersold by rivals who are in a position to buy fresh stocks; and as an offset to losses from such a source, if there are profits to be made by a rise in jobbing values, the retailer should not hesitate to take advantage of it.

To the complaint of customers who may say "your goods only cost so much, therefore it is unjust to put up prices because new goods cost more," the answer is: A retailer is a man between the manufacturer and the customer, who, by making a specialty of retail distribution, enables the manufacturer to give his exclusive attention to fabrication on a large scale; for if such manufacturer was obliged to retail his goods he could not do so large a business, and thus his goods would cost more to make, as it is the quantity that permits a low cost; thus the retailer is a most necessary convenience to the public, in the distribution of products made on a large scale at localities where the best economy is permissable; and for such convenience the retailer justifiably asks a fair compensation for service rendered at market valuations, be they high or low. The answer will convince the customer of the justice of marking up goods when the market requires it.

NOTES TAKEN ON THE ROAD.

The Battersby hotel, Simcoe, is metropolitan in every respect.

Mr. W. P. Price is another Simcoe groceryman who has built up an enviable trade in that town, as well as a pleasant residence.

Mr. J. E. Baxter is one of the permanent corner stones of this live town. He has a fine store in Simcoe, and an exceptionally fine stock in it.

Mrs. Jennie Smith, of Acton, Ont., has taken the store lately occupied by Mr. W. J. King, in that village, and has put in a stock of goods entirely new and fresh. It is a venture I trust she may succeed in.

Mr. J. C. Watson and C. Marlett, although last mentioned, are not least as prominent Simcoe business men. They can always be relied on to further the interest of the trade or the welfare of the town and its citizens.

Mr. Geo. J. McKiee, who has just retired from the grocery business in Simcoe, has made a handsome fortune. His brother, R. J. McKiee, again takes on the habiliments of the business, and I venture to say it will lose nothing in his hands.

Mr. Geo. W. Lea is the popular fruiterer and confectioner of Simcoe. The boys and girls take their ice cream in his elegant parlors. He also has the pure Mungo, Madree, Hijo, El Padre and Cable cigars always on hand for those who relish a first class Havana.

G. W. Calcott has bought out the grocery business of J. R. Gosline, London, the latter again taking the hotel business which he sold some time ago to Alonzo Hall. Mr. Calcott comes from the farm, and is said to be "well fixed," as the saying is, and having his own farm produce to sell, will have the advantage of retail prices.

Mr. R. Dowrie, grocer, Guelph, says he begins to feel the effects of the good harvest in increased trade and collections. Although Mr. Dowrie is located where farmers can conveniently trade, his business does not depend wholly on them He is in the manufacturing district, and does a large everyday trade that is permanent.

Messrs. Walker & Son, Guelph, have done a very large business in fruits the past ten days, and expect it to continue yet for some time. They are very heavy handlers of peaches, plums, grapes, pears, and all varieties of foreign fruits. They have two very large stores, one of which is used exclusively for fruits, canned goods, etc.

One of the oldest grocery stands in the town of Simcoe is that on the corner of Norfork and Robinson streets, occupied by Mr. G. A. Curtis, who succeeded to the business ten years ago, and whose father did business on the same spot for thirty years previous. This old landmark will soon have to give way to a more modern structure, as Simcoe is fast approaching the period when she will put on a city garb and may take first place on the home stretch at no distant day with surrounding cities. The grocery trade in Simcoe is in the hands of enterprising citizens, which is essential to any growing prosperous town.

Mr. M. J. Morrow, Peterborough, received on Saturday last, from the railway freight houses several dray loads of goods (ordinary orders I think) which he left piled up in front of his store during the day, and which must have been quite an advertisement, as Saturday is a day when Peterborough shows what her surroundings are, the main streets being a veritable "wall street" for traffic and business.

The Simcoe canning house is one of the industries that help to make up this place. Nearly, if not quite, all the vegetable pack of this cannery is grown in the immediate vicinity, which puts a considerable amount of money in circulation early in the season when it seems to do the most good. Mr. Innis, the president of the company, is a pushing business man, not only for the company but also in the interests of the town as a citizen.

Messrs. Watson Bros., Guelph, have sold out their stock of groceries to Mr. E. S. Kilgour, but they retain the wine and liquor business which is partitioned off entirely separate. Mr. Kilgour comes from the traveling staff of J. W. Cowan & Co., Toronto, and I know of no one better fitted to succeed in the grocery business than one who has traveled for them for a number of years. With Mr. Kilgour's experience success is certain.

Messrs. Jackson and Hallett are among the successful grocery merchants of Guelph, and if their delivery wagons are kept as busy other days as on the day I was there they have no reason to complain of hard times, but I should say they are not of the complaining kind anyway. Several travelers called while I was there, and all were received with frank, open courtesy, free from any complaints or grumbling. This is characteristic of all the best merchants in Guelph.

"A year since you were here," said Mr. P. Anderson, Guelph. "Well, I am glad to say it is not a week yet since the GROCER was here, or I should miss it. I like the paper," he said, and wonder that you have any one left to canvass for it. All should take it by this time. Such remarks are made every day by leading busy grocerymen like Mr. Anderson. You never hear such busy men say they don't have time to read it. No such men of business consider that they are idle when they are reading THE CANADIAN GROCER.

"SEE ALL YOU CAN" was the advise sent out by the Toronto Biscuit & Confectionery Co., 7 Front east, Toronto, to all the grocerymen and confectionery dealers throughout the Dominion when visiting the city during the fair, and to say that a great many accepted the advice and called not only to see the immense works and stock of this concern but to leave their orders, is attested by the severe strain on their capacity to fill orders. Inquirers at the factory were met by the information that they were working over time to fill orders. The success of this firm in establishing a reputation for fine goods, with the grocery trade, is phenomenal, they having been established only since April last. They have not only the very best retail houses in the city but also throughout the country to seel their goods. Their fancy biscuits give universal satisfaction and are equal to any goods on the market. Their butter crackers, ginger cookies, graham wafers, grandma's cookies, oyster crackers, soda biscuits, school cake, etc., etc., are in great demand by the trade.

In conversation with one of the many advertising patrons of the GROCER some days ago, substantial proofs were given of the benefits they derived from advertising in this valuable medium, and that brought to mind another recent conversation with a prominent manufacturer of Toronto. Being solicited for an advertisement for THE CANADIAN GROCER, the latter remarked that his firm did no advertising, and they cared nothing for the grocery trade. His belief was that if goods were made such as the people wanted, that was all the advertising they required; and when the writer mildly suggested that the grocer was the man that bought the goods, and the one the manufacturer looked to for his pay, the grocer was surely "in it" in some sense. I was summarily informed, however, that he knew quite as much about it as I did, and when I considered to the party's long business career and phenomenal success, I had to admit that his position was a strong one financially and conceitedly, but I consoled myself with the reflection that in these days when a man thinks he is a little superior to all others, that no other goods are manufactured equal to his, that others are not as strictly honest in the manufacturing business as he is, that the tradesman is no factor in the case; I am inclined to think that perhaps it is just as well for him that the old trade mark is a good one, and the name a strong one, and very large capital behind it, and it is just as well that he is very enthusiastic on the point of his own importance in the matter. The firm has unquestionably a wide reputation and a large trade, but the competition by live prosperous firms, in the same line, can be counted by the dozen, and they, too, attribute their success to good goods and honest dealing. At the same time they do advertising and believe in it.

CHICAGO GROCERS VS. PEDLARS.

In their fight against the pedlar, the Grocers' and Butchers' Association of Chicago certainly has the sympathy of the public. They have asked the assistance of the Taxpayers' Association in a manly way, and their request will no doubt meet with respectful consideration. In support of its depreciation of pedling, the grocers' and butchers' cite the following reasons :

1. Pedling is to some degree a nuisance, and is only tolerated when licensed.

2. The pedlar is a detriment to permanent business interests because he is never permanently located.

3. Pedlars are dangerous competitors of those who own stores.

4. Pedlars deteriorate the public streets without making adequate return for their use.

5. Fruit pedlars endanger the public health by depositing their refuse in the streets.

6. Their business methods damage the store-keeper who cannot cry his wares from street to street.

7. Pedlars who pay but a single license very frequently have many helpers, each of whom should pay a license.

8. Pedlars dispose of decayed and injurious food products, otherwise unsalable, to the detriment of the public health.

9. There are many dishonest pedlars who defraud the public by light weights and short measures.

10. The pedling business is monopolized by an undesirable class.

11. Pedlars' licenses in Chicago are lower than in any other large city, but in justice to the permanent business interests they ought to be largely increased. This is the most just way of repleting the city treasury.—Chicago Grocer.

BLEACHING DRIED FRUIT A MISTAKE.

The subject of this paper should command the careful attention of consumers of dried fruit, of conscientious fruit dealers, and of all health authorities. Fruit is now regarded more as a necessity than as a luxury, the want of it being a common cause of ill health.

As fresh fruit is not always obtainable, various methods for preserving it are in use, drying being one of the oldest and best for many fruits. Middle-aged people recollect when sun or air drying was the only method for market. Then some good housewife discovered that more rapid drying by artificial heat, with or without the addition of sugar, was a cleaner method, safer against fermentation and decay, retained the flavor better, and the fruit was also lighter colored, than when sun or air dried. The present evaporators are only an enlargement of the idea of such more rapid drying, while canning consists in the exclusion of the micro-organic germs of fermentation.

This is an age of progress, yet experience often shows that not all changes are improvements. It is about fifteen years since the sulphuring or bleaching of dried fruit began. At first only the uniform light color was sought, as in apples, pears, etc., but for some years past nearly all the large evaporating establishments have "sulphured" all kinds of fruits and some vegetables, and now much of the California sun-dried fruit for market is also treated in the same manner. The light color, especially of apples, early attracted unthinking consumers and commercial men, thus materially increasing the price of such fruit. That caused the practice to spread even to those who disapproved of it. The expense and trouble were very slight. Fruit so treated is said to dry more readily, consequently all now prefer to do it.

While the apparent change is only in color, there is a loss of the natural fruit flavor, even by the most careful sulphuring. Unfortunately, some people do not notice the difference, but careful comparison shows it, as is admitted by the manufacturer of such fruit.

The practice began in California with apricots, as early as 1879. At the Twelfth State Fruit Growers' Convention, held in Fresno during four days in November, 1889, a paper on "Fruit Drying" was read by J. L. Mosher, of San Jose, and in his paper he remarked,—"If fruit be picked before ripe and oversulphured to produce whiteness, it is devoid of its true rich taste and flavor, and only requires polishing to make buttons." In discussing the paper, one gentlemen said, —"I believe sulphuring the fruit is the greatest mistake in the world. I do it but I believe it is wrong ; the flavor of the fruit is gone after it is sulphured."

This change in quality was the first thing that called the attention of the writer's family to what was lacking in the "nice, uniformly colored" bleached fruits.

Later investigations have proved the presence of sulphate of zinc, "white vitrol," in all samples of fruit where zinc surfaced trays were used to hold the sulphered fruit while drying. Interested parties have charged the German prohibition of American evaporated apples to rival trade opposition, but there is no German fruit to compete with them. The real cause was the finding of zinc poison in considerable quantity. A good paternal government aims to protect its people.

The advocates of sulphuring fruit say :—(1) It dries quicker, (2) looks better, (3) keeps better, and (4) sells better. Besides, it makes ripe, unripe, and poor fruit all look alike ; and if not so good for it, but few know it.

Sulphurous acid is formed by burning sulphur, and is readily absorbed by water. It abstracts oxygen from many vegetable substances, and thereby bleaches them. It also tends to prevent misroscopic organizations that cause fermentation. The acid in liquid form is colorless, very cheap, and smells like burning sulphur ; is antiseptic, a preservative fluid for some substances,—sample fruits, etc. Sulphur is often burned to disinfect sick-rooms of disease germs, and to kill rats, mice, and vermin, but its use with food is objectionable. Ants and other insects, it is said, will not touch sulphured fruit, while they readily attack well ripened fruit that is not sulphured. The instinct of insects and animals is sometimes better than the practice of human beings. In general, substances that repel such creatures are hardly safe for human food. The effect on consumption has seemed to be a decided falling off in demand among the more intelligent class of people. Retail grocers know that many who once used dried fruit extensively say, "Somehow we have lost our relish for it," and have almost ceased to use it since the craze for sulphuring fruits began. Fruit men say, "The public demands sulphured fruit, will pay more for it, and we will supply it." The public will yet show them that it can get its eyes open. As the green and canned fruit interests are the only permanent gainers by the sulphuring process, they are interested to have it continued.

It is not easy to obtain a superior quality of unbleached fruit. In 1889 several retail grocers who understood the question corresponded with parties evaporating apples. The reply was, that "if an order for not less than twenty barrels was received at one time, apples would be furnished unbleached, otherwise not"

The slightly yellowish brown color of unbleached dried fruit is an evidence of ripeness, good quality, and proper drying. The more rapid drying the lighter will be the color, and the fruit will keep well if at once properly excluded from the air. When sulphured, the good, the poor, and the unripe all look alike. Not so with the unbleached. No poor nor unripe fruit can make good dried fruit. The gain of sulphering is always with the dealer, and not with the consumer.

In preferring looks to quality, the people are often at fault. Public enlightenment will correct most dietetic errors. Good health is now sought by many, and will be by more in the near future, through correct living, rather than by the swallowing of drugs. And in that more excellent way, "in the good time coming," there will be no demand for sulphured and other drugged fruit among intelligent people.

There is danger from fruit in metal cans, as is well known, and fresh fruit is frequently unobtainable, while both are often more expensive than dried fruits. Good unsophisticated dried fruits are always harmless. If green fruits are at times unobtainable, canned fruits dangerous, and a popular craze has rendered dried fruits also dangerous, what can the suffering public do? It is between the alternatives of using no fruit, or that which is injured or poisonious. Is the sulphuring of fruit a mistake, or a crime?

To correct the error, enlighten the people, and prohibit injurious practices. Legal suasion only will stop it at present. The common schools in many states are required to teach the effects of alcohol and narcotics. Why not also include the effects of different foods?—Transactions of American Health Association, Vol. 14.

EGGS.

We have good reason to believe that the egg trade of a great many retail grocers' in the cities, is about on a par with their sugar department, so far as profit is concerned, the small margin between the trouble and selling price barely paying for the cost of handling the staple. There is decidedly something "rotten in Denmark" when retail profits on an article or series of articles have sunk so low that their sale is unremunerative and persisted in only because it is a convenience to customers, and in this case we believe the usual explanation will hold good, i.e., that quality has been sacrificed for some reason, probably in an effort to catch trade by holding out low prices as an inducement. We think this is a serious mistake with any food product like eggs, and butter which if not good, must be actually worthless. There are many descriptions of groceries, which in the point of quality, cover a wide range, yet the most inferior grades possess their merits and positive intrinsic value. It is different with eggs. A stale egg is an abomination, and there is but little leeway between the finest fresh laid and the grade below which no prudent, experienced retailer cares to press in selecting eggs. We believe it will pay grocers to give especial attention to the quality of the eggs which they handle, and to take pains to secure a grade that will invariably give satisfaction even though the price has to be marked up correspondingly. In other words, we believe that fine eggs at a good profit will sell more freely than poor or irregular stock at just about cost.

The neglect of retail grocers to "candle" eggs often leads to a loss of custom. A bad one will be found occasionally in packages of really good stock, and if left with the rest may disgust a good customer and provoke her to the point of transferring her trade to another store. "Candling" takes time, and is perhaps unnecessary when absolutely fresh eggs are procured from a quarter beyond suspicion, but when the quality of an invoice is in the least degree doubtful, it should be rigorously practiced and the stale eggs removed.—Merchants' Review.

MAINTAINING APPEARANCES.

There is a fact that business men cannot afford to lose sight of, and that is, that cheerfulness pays. With good health, pleasant surroundings, and a prosperous business, cheerfulness is natural. But there are not many men so fortunate as to exist under such a fevorable combination of circumstances.

The part of a complete business education consists in presenting to the world a face that has the appearance of reflecting a contented mind. It matters not how unfortunate the possessor may be, or how complicated and embarrassed his business may become, no man can afford to appear distressed. He must counterfeit prosperity, whether he has it or not.

Business is essentially selfish, and the man who would deliberately bankrupt you in the course of business, might be the first to extend you aid afterward if you went to him for charity. The poor, the dispirited, and the discouraged are not attractive, and no one buys of a failing merchant because of his misfortune. People prefer to be deceived rather than know the truth, if the truth is unpleasant.

So maintain appearances at any cost. If business is dull, don't confess it. If collections are slow, don't acknowledge it. If your business affairs are becoming complicated, keep it to yourself. Don't frighten customers away by a clouded face. If you must frown, do so after business hours. Cheerfulness, real or simulated, is worth many a hundred dollars to a business man.—St. Louis Evening Reporter.

HOW THE MERCHANT CAN MAINTAIN HIS CREDIT.

If he has any claims for shortage or damage, let him send them on the day the goods are checked.

When a monthly statement is rendered, check it, and if wrong write about the error at once.

When he writes, let him remember that civility is the password to good treatment, and that business correspondence is an art which, when properly cultivated, brings large returns.

If he cannot remit when asked to he should drop a line stating when he reasonably expects to be able to do so.

If notified that after a lapse of time, he will be drawn upon, immediate attention should be given to the matter, first to see that the amount and terms are correct, and, secondly, that his bill book will permit him to accept the draft. If not, let him write exactly what he wants. Unless there is a prior understanding to the contrary, let it be his ardent ambition never to dishoner a draft.

If he cannot meet a draft at maturity, he should write or telegraph.

And above all things he should make it his firm purpose never to "kick," when kicking is prompted solely by a captious spirit or when he is sure kicking will do no good.

To these suggestions we might add one more thing, and that is in ordering from salesmen or by mail, to order deliberately and with such intelligence that it will be unnecessary to cancel any order ever given for the worst crank in business is the cancellation crank, and we sometimes speculate as to whether it would not be wiser for a man who has been hasty in sending an order, or has made a mistake in it, to stand the cost and charge it to experience rather than to class himself among the cranks referred to. —Exchange.

WHAT MAY "STORE ATTRACTIONS" IMPLY?

To the question "what may store attractions imply?" there comes a list of answers from a multitude of shoppers :

"A certain artful system of coaxing to buy without being conscious of the coaxing!" says one clever student of human nature.

"A getting there first, every time!" exclaims a bright though slangy observer.

"The greatest variety of the newest goods!" says another decisively.

"The best arrangement of material forming the special supply of each establishment!"

"The most systematic management!"

"The finest, most tasteful presentation of wares!"

"The finest building with the greatest conveniences for exhibition of goods!"

"Convenience and ease in procuring one's desires!"

"Shopping without friction and irritation of nerves!"

"Each department kept exclusively by those understanding it thoroughly!"

"Perfect neatness in all surroundings, employees included!"

"Promptitude in waiting upon customers!"

"Shopping made a pleasure through general cheerfulness of atmosphere and manners of employed!"

"Courteous clerks, having an innate sense of propriety, and a good deal of tact!"

"The largest assortment and the most reasonable prices!"

"The most reliable goods and the knack of springing them upon the market!"—Pennsylvania Grocer.

In the United States there are 84,000,000 cans of tomatoes consumed annually, of which Maryland produces over one-third. This season the output in Maryland will not be more than one-fourth the usual quantity. The continued rain and unfavorable weather ruined what promised at the beginning of the season to be an unusually fine crop. The Virginia crop of tomatoes will be light. The wet weather does not permit the fruit to ripen. It is predicted that prices will be higher this winter.—New England Grocer.

The retail grocers of this city must have rubbed their eyes to see in a morning contemporary a report of a meeting under the heading "The Retail Grocers." A glance through the report itself would convince any member of the local trade that somebody had blundered. "The Retail Druggists" was probably the label intended.

Kenward; first vice-president, H. P. Lawrence; second vice-president, T. B. Taylor; secretary, R. Moody; treasurer, H. F. Williams. The executive committee will be appointed at the next meeting of the Board.

Mr. Patterson of Brant, on Thursday moved an amendment to the bill enacting the amended sugar duties, raising the standard of free sugar from 14 Dutch standard to 16 Dutch standard, and admitting all above this at ½ cent per pound duty. He criticised the promise of the government that the people should have free sugar, and stated that they had really only given free sugar to the refiners. Sugar from 14 Dutch standard down he urged would hardly ever be used for domestic consumption, hence the people would be practically taxed for their sugar. The tax of all sugar over the 16 D. standard, he proposed to reduce from a duty of 8 10ths of a cent per pound to 5-10ths of a cent. The amendment was voted down.

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, Sept. 17, 1891.

GROCERIES.

The progress of the wholesale grocery trade is seldom concurrent with that of the Exhibition. There is usually a lull in actual business while the great Fair is on. That lull is not unsatisfactory, as it is more of the nature of a breathing space before a spell of strong activity than of a loss of time. The travelers are always in during the last week, and though the traders of the country usually come in freely and call upon the wholesale houses, it is not much in the way of business. There have been as many retailers in the city at this Exhibition as at former ones, and there has been no more business done by the wholesale houses than during former exhibitions. The week has been bare of incidents of market importance. Trade goes along at the pace it commonly holds when summer shades into autumn.

CANNED GOODS.

The canned goods market has not yet reached that stage or degree of activity when a week's trade reveals any startlingly new aspect. The transactions or other market influences of the week have done little to bring into bolder relief the essential features of the situation. It does not seem as if either buyers or sellers had yet made up their minds definitely as to whether, for instance, there is an excess or otherwise of peas packed. Consequently neither desire to sell nor desire to buy is more acute than it was. Prices are therefore unmodified, peas quoting from $1.10. Tomatoes may still tip the scale on the side of a fair crop or may come out short. Last week the weather was beautiful, the very finest that September could deal out, and it probably increased the chances of a full pack. In the meantime round lots of peas, corn, and tomatoes in equal parts are quoted at $1.10 still, and neither side of the market appears eager for business yet. Corn is not much farther forward than are tomatoes. The extent of the pack of either is still enveloped in uncertainty. Salmon quotes from $1.25 to $1.50 for tall tins of Fraser River. On the coast the market is very firm, and offers below quotations are declined by the packers. New Star lobsters are in stock, and higher than they were a year ago, quoting now at $2.50.

The Delhi Canning Company is adopting a new and attractive label for this year's pack of peaches.

COFFEE.

A demand of the usual weekly proportions has been experienced. Mild grades are in chief request. The stock is sufficient in everything but choice Rios for which there is some call. Rios at 21 to 22c. are the lowest and most in sale. Javas and Mochas sell quite freely as well. There are no changes to record.

DRIED FRUIT.

By an error in last week's report the first shipment of new Valencias to reach this market was stated to be on the Sardinian. In correction it is right to say that the Lake Winnipeg was the boat on which the first Valencias arrived. The new raisins show good color and condition, but appear to be slightly under the average in size. They are selling at 8c. per lb. The price advanced 1s. in Denia the day the first stock arrived. The stock of old crop Valencias is still considerable and cheap, quoting from 4 to 5c. Currants are very firm and scarce at 6¼ to 6½c. in barrels. Prunes are dull and weak at 5½ to 6½c. This shipment made the shortest time on record for the first new season's Valencias to reach this market, having come to hand 24 days after leaving Denia.

A cable from Trieste advises importers of a slight decline in prices for new Sphinx prepared prunes.

NUTS.

The local nut market is as uneventful as usual. Buying is in small quantities and in frequent orders. Prices are steady at points indicated in Prices Current a week ago.

RICE AND SPICES.

A steady call for rice keeps trade moving. The grades most in request are the finer ones. Prices are firm at quotations, Japan being particularly so at 4¾ to 5c. Spices present no new aspect. They are perhaps in slightly more active demand.

A sale of 100 bags of B rice was made the other day by Davidson & Hay for the Hudson Bay Company's store at Winnipeg.

SUGAR.

There is a continuance of the brisk demand for sugar that has been the leading feature of trade during the past fortnight. The sales increase as fruit gets more plentiful. Granulated still over-balances yellows, though the latter are in better request than they were in the sugar flurry of July. Granulated is steady at 5 to 5⅛c., yellows from 3¾c. upwards, raws from 3½ to 4½c. In yellows the market appears to be now rather firmer than it was a few days ago. Raws are quiet.

Willett & Gray's weekly statistical says of the New York market: Following the large transactions on the last day of the last week's review, an advance of 1-16c. was obtained on Saturday on both Muscovados and Centrifugals, which advance has been maintained to the close, although business has been only moderate. The demand for refined, however, continues so large that a further activity in the raw market is probable very soon. The European markets have shown very little change during the week, operators on both sides waiting the development of the beet crop now near at hand. The market for refined has been all one way, and scarcely a day has passed without an advance being made on one or more grades of refined sugar. These advances have not checked the demand, which continues very heavy under the urgent necessities of the fruit canning season. Fruits are abundant, and refiners are reaping a rich harvest of profits from their enormous business. The demand has been so enormous that the refiners have been unable to keep up with it. Orders are only taken subject to a delay in shipment of five days on some grades and ten days on others.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

The trade in syrups is light. Some darks are selling, but only to a limited extent, neither the supply nor the demand amounting to much in these grades. Molasses is very quiet, a sale of an ordinary quantity occurring only now and then. Prices of both syrups and molasses are unchanged.

TEAS.

There is more movement of stock now. Transactions between brokers and jobbers are more frequently heard of. Japans are quite active. The market seems to be in a good condition for the ready distribution of new season's stock, as all the old crop teas have been pretty well cleaned up, not only in this country but everywhere. Prices are reported higher in Japan, but competition among the importers keeps them from rising here. The grades that are in chief sale are to job at from 17 to 20c. Congous are also selling well. The lowest grades are 18c. Those from 18 to 20c. show unusually good value. Young Hyson's are still scarce, and are firm and higher in China and chief seats of distribution.

There is nothing of importance to report about Indian, the demand continues steady and there has been some enquiry for cheap Pekoe Souchongs in London. As will be seen from the figures given below the deliveries of all teas during last month show a satisfactory increase over those of the corresponding period last year. By wire we learn that the export from Calcutta during August was about 14 million lbs., and that from Ceylon a little over 4½ million lbs., against 6¼ millions for June and a little over 5½ millions in July. The improved quality in the bulk of the offerings noticed last week has been maintained; many excellent invoices have been offered and some high quotations recorded. During the last day or so some irregularity has been noticeable in the bidding for teas over 1s. per lb., and in many instances the best prices of last week have scarcely been realised. Teas with useful liquors under 10d. per lb. have well maintained their prices.

McMeekin & Co,'s Notes for August on Indian and Ceylon Teas, says: The offerings of Indian were 81,000 packages, against 62,000 packages in the same month of 1890. The quality of a large proportion was very poor, but there was a fair quantity of really desirable teas, particularly in the latter portion of the month. Low quotations were made throughout for the inferior grades, but for all the better liquoring teas prices gradually hardened, and showed a decided advance on the level currant in the previous month. Many of the teas from Assam were very fine, and several Darjeeling gardens showed more choice quality than at any time all last season ; consequently some exceedingly high prices were recorded. The improvement in quality led to more general trade, and a better tone was apparent in the market, latterly, than for several months past. The average of public sale prices for the month was about 10¼d. per lb. The imports were 8,998,165 lbs., and the deliveries 7,268,049 lbs., leaving in stock at 31st Aug., 20,314,389 lbs. The teas to arrive for sale in September, although of better average quality, do not embrace so many really fine invoices as have recently been offered. Advices home, by mail, from Calcutta, are now stating the crop estimates at several millions lower than previously ; but from telegraphic reports direct from several districts, it is evident that pluckings are now largely ahead of those at the same period of last season. By wire, the shipments from Calcutta till 31st August are advised as 5½ million pounds in excess of the quantity at that date in 1890. The offerings of Ceylon were 70,000 packages, against 49,000 packages in the same month of 1890. The character of the trading was much the same as in July. The great bulk of the quantity sold was very inferior and undesirable, and for such teas the market gradually declined. On the other hand, there was a strong demand throughout the month for all teas standing out from the ordinary level, and a marked advance in the value of such was established, extending in some classes to many pence per pound. The average of public sales prices for the month was about 9d. per lb., against 10¼d. per lb. for the corresponding month last year. The imports were 6,019,994 lbs., and the deliveries 5,156,082 lbs., leaving in stock at 31st August 17,146,520 lbs. It is satisfactory to know that the teas coming forward show better quality, and that the quantity will be less than of late. The shipments from Colombo in August were only 4¾ million lbs. The market for China Teas was very dull, with little business passing At 31st August the quantity exported from China to the United Kingdom stood four million pounds in excess of the quantity at same date last year. Small auctions of Java teas passed at firm prices.

PETROLEUM.

The trade in petroleum pursues a very unvarying course. Though the demand for refined improves, yet no attendant change is to be noted, prices continuing, though firmer, at standing quotations.

The Petrolia Advertiser reports: Petrolia Crude 1.35 per bbl. Oil Springs crude $1.35 per bbl. So far as activity is concerned, the oil market continues on the whole "Stale Flat and uninteresting." Apart from a hand to mouth sort of inquiry, there are few buyers. A good many requests come in from the east for quotations for refined oil ; but the sending of prompt replies seems hardly to stimulate business. Perhaps the explanation is to be found in the fact that none of the refiners are particularly anxious to sell at present market figures, and it is barely possible that the prices telegraphed have not proved attractive. Of course with their state of affairs the existing stocks of crude oil are slightly increasing. No one however, for a moment, anticipates that the refined oil market will weaken in consequence of plethora. It would be exceedingly interesting reading if each manufacturer would candidly take the general public into its confidence as to their supply of raw material. In the absense of definite information, surmise must take the place of certainty, and guesses must snpplement information. We think we speak "by the card," although we do not pretend to have received any direct information, when we reiterate our previous statements that there is no large surplus of either refined or crude. With an ordinary market springing up which is bound to come with the fall trade and as the days get shorter, manufacturers will find themselves taxed to their utmost capacity to supply the wants of their customers. The Imperial Oil Company however is rushing business in great shape, their business connections are so large that it keeps their refinery running almost full capacity all the year round. The drillers are kept busy but small wells are the result of most of the later ventures.

DRUGS AND CHEMICALS.

With the exception of a reduction in the price of camphor, nothing has occured in the drug market to cause any modification of the report that suited a week ago. Camphor is 65 to 75c., or 10c., cheaper than it was. Trade is very good.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

The sale of butter has not materially slackened. All that comes is freely taken, and while local consumption does not warrant any further enlargement of the supply, yet export business does, if easier prices can be got. Choice butter runs from 14 to 16c., mediums at 10 to 13c. In the better class of mediums the tendency appears to be towards accumulation, as the demand for table use as well as that for baking is for other grades. In the qualities nearest to choice some collecting for export is reported, a car being made up last Saturday at about 13c. Stocks of butter in the country are believed to be not excessive, the movement referred to in last week's report having supplied a healthy outlet for a surplus that threatened to weaken prices. Also, the market had nothing to carry over of old stock as in former years.

Cheese is firm and in reasonably good request. Full creams are 10c., with 9c. for half creams and 8½c. for skims.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

BEANS—Are $1.70 to $1.80. A few small sales reported.

DRIED APPLES—Are still in the background. New is 6c.

EVAPORATED APPLES—Have not roused any interest for weeks. Some new have been offered, but nobody wants to buy yet. The price is 9½ to 10c.

HAY—A few cars come in each day for $11.50 to $12, but not enough to make scarcity a less pronounced feature.

HIDES—Green are steady at 5 to 5½c. for No. 1 green below and up to 60lbs. respectively. Cured 6½c.

HONEY—Is unchanged at 7 to 10c. for strained, and 14 to 16c. for sections.

HOPS—Are yet unsettled. The brewers are working off old crop stock, and prefer to let the market find its level through the anxiety of growers rather than by the interest of buyers. New run up to 25c., with yearlings 18 to 20c.

POTATOES—Are selling at 40c. on track, and 50 to 55c. out of stock.

SKINS—Sheepskins advanced to 65c. today. Calfskins are 5 to 7c.

STRAW—Sells readily at $6 to $7.

WOOL—Buyers continue to pay 19c., but say they would rather have the money than the wool.

FISH.

Some improvement is to be chronicled this week. More fish have been in demand, and stocks have been increased. Prices have also gone up. Pickrel are 6c., pike 5c., whitefish and salmon trout are 7 to 8c., lake herring are $2.50 to $3., haddock are 6c., B. C. salmon 16c. These are the varieties in stock.

FRUITS.

Receipts continue liberal in certain lines and prices to weaken. Early Crawford peaches cannot now bring above $1, others are 75c. Bartlett pears, after a week spell, have firmed up again to $4 and $4.75 per barrel. Apples are steady at $1.75 to $2.75 per barrel. Watermelons are going out of demand, but quote yet at 15 to 20c. Musk melons are $1.75 to $2 per barrel. Tomatoes are unchanged at 20 to 25c. a basket. Eggplant fruit is 25c. Grapes sell at 2½ to 3c. for Champions, 5 to 6c. for Mare's Early and 4 to 5c. for Jessica.

GREEN FRUIT.

Trade is fairly good. Stocks are not large, but they suffice for the proportions of the business done. Messina lemons are scarce at $4.50 to $5.50. Maoris are $8. Verdillis, fancy, are $7. Sorrento oranges are $3.75 to $4.50. Jamaicas are $8 to $8.50. Bananas are $1 to $1.50. Sweet potatoes are unchanged at $3.50 to $4.

PROVISIONS.

There is no relapse from the strong state of the demand. Prices are firm, and scarcity is a more general feature in all packing and provision houses.

BACON—Long clear has advanced another ¼c. It is now 8¾c. in trade lots and 8½c. in round lots. Of the latter there are few moving, owing to difficulty in making up anything approaching a carload. Smoked bellies are 10 to 11c., backs 11c., rolls 9c.

HAMS—Are in strong request at 12½ to 13c. for smoked, and 11 to 11½c. for sweet pickled.

LARD—Is scarce at 10¼ to 10¾c. for pure, and 8½ to 9c. for compound.

MESS PORK—Brings $15 to $15.50 for heavy, and $16 to $17 for short cut. Trade is quiet.

DRESSED HOGS—A car occasionally arrives. The price paid for rail lots is $7, though this market is weaker since the last car was bought.

SALT.

Trade has beeh quiet since the opening of the week. Exhibition attractions having affected it. The sales include 2 cars of barrels at $1.20, 1 of dairy at $1.25, and 2 cars of sacks at 70c.

DRY GOODS.

Visitors from the general stores and dry goods of the country appear to make the dry goods quarter their favorite rendezvous these days. There have been a good many received by the various houses in the city this week, and a good deal of business is reported. A buoyant feeling predominates in that department of trade, as the fall outlook brightens as it approaches.

HALIFAX MARKET QUOTATIONS.

(Wholesale Selling Rates.)

HALIFAX, Sept. 16, 1891.

BREADSTUFFS.—The local flour market is quiet and steady with prices unchanged, as millers speak of nothing in the way of concessions. However, business cannot be characterized as brisk, although steady enough, as buyers show no disposition to operate, except in a small way. Car lots of strong bakers and straight rollers move in a quiet way. In lower grades business is very quiet while offerings are not heavy. There is only a small demand for meal, but prices rule steady. The demand for feed is good, but the supply is sufficient.

SUGAR.—A good demand is reported for yellow sugars. The range as quoted at the refineries is a shade below last week's quotations, but in view of the fact that yellows have just been marked up in New York, an advance would not surprise the trade here. Granulated is in fair demand and firm, and an advance of 1-16 has been reported in New York.

MOLASSES.—Molasses is quiet, but the market shows some improvement. Stocks here are rather small and prices comparatively low.

FISH.—There is little to add to our previous reports on the fish situation. The catch of all kinds of fish has been so far this season very much below the average.

ST. JOHN, N. B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N.B., Sept. 14, 1891.

Business during the past week has been quiet. In both wholesale and retail the trade is not up to what it was last year at this date. The effects of the strike in the mills is still felt, although it is now almost a month since they began work again. Fruits are in light demand, especially apples which are coming in quite freely. Flour and meal is steady. Sugar and syrups easy. Provisions firm and steady.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—The supply of good table butter is quite limited with considerable enquiry. Prices have advanced some, and quotations are 18 to 19c. for choice stock.

CHEESE—The firmness in this article continues, and stocks are light with considerable demand at 10½ to 11.

EGGS—We cannot report much about eggs as the stock offering is not as fresh as dealers want. Quotations are about as last week 11 to 11½c. with quiet trade.

POTATOES—The receipts are light and market firm for good stock. Farmers report them rotting badly, sales are made at $1 to $1.10 per bbl.

APPLES—The apple crop is about an average one. The supply at present is quite large owing to the storm of last week having blown off so many it will likely cause considerable higher prices next month than are being obtained now. Quotations are $1 to $2.50 per bbl.

PLUMS—This fruit is quite limited in supply with active inquiry at $3 to $4 per bushel.

FLOUR.—The quotations on flour are about the same as last week, with a steady jobbing trade for small lots. Buyers are cautious about giving orders, as they do not know what turn the market will take.

OATMEAL—Is moving slowly at lower prices and a weaker market is looked for.

CORNMEAL—Is steady at $3.45 to $3.50 per barrel.

FISH—The scarcity of cod fish during the past week has caused an upward movement in prices. Mediums are quoted at $3.85 to $4.25 per quintal, large are $4.75 to $5, and considerable activity is noticed.

POLLOCK—Are moving in accord with codfish, with about the same advance in prices. Pickled fish are steady as before. Shelburn $4.50 to $4.75 per barrel. Canso $6 to $6.25. Smoked herring 8 to 9c., new 11 to 13c.

Digby chickens 14 to 15c. in moderate supply.

THE SARNIA ASSOCIATION MILITANT.

The trouble between the Grocers' Association of Sarnia and those grocers who don't belong to it still continues. All the wholesale houses have been notified by the association not to sell goods to grocers who are not members of the association, under penalty that if they so sell, the members of the association will cease dealing with those wholesale houses which sell to the non-members.

The above paragraph is clipped from the London Free Press. As it was scarcely self-explanatory, we deemed it prudent to submit it to the secretary of the association concerned, and ask whether the statement agreed with the fact. The following reply was forwarded, and it shows the course of the association was fully justified :

SARNIA, Sept. 15th 1891.

SIR :—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of the 9th inst., which came duly to hand, and in reply would state that the item referred to in the London Free Press is not untrue. The members of the Grocer's Association of Sarnia, have been obliged to resort to their present mode of dealing with at least two non-members, because of the unfair and unprincipled way in which they have endeavoured to increase their own trade, at the expense of the association. They have represented us as having combined for the purpose of enriching ourselves at the poor man's expense, by asking larger profits, and to substantiate their argument are selling some leading articles at and below cost, and in this way try to work upon the sympathy of the consumer. Such assersions are false in every sense of their meaning, and you sir know enough of retail grocers' associations to know the facts, and can realize at once our position. I might state further that we have used every kindly persuasion to have these gentlemen join us, but they thought they saw millions in staying out, and the same evil motive with which they accuse us is here characterized in their own actions. We recognize the rights of these men to do business, but must demand that the line of said rights be drawn at truth.

The consumers of Sarnia and vicinity are an intelligent people, and are not to be influenced by the tact and skill of these non-members, and I think the grand success which attained our first annual outing yesterday, is an evidence that we still enjoy the confidence of our customers. Out of a population of six and a half thousand about five thousand assembled at the Park to witness and take part in the demonstration which proved a grand success. The different events were all well contested and every body delighted with the programme.

Yours truly,

M. A. SANDERS,
Sec'y. of Association.

P.S.—I might state in regard to the item in Free Press, it is apt to be misleading ; it is true in part, but not to the extent that it is evidently designed to convey. We have not approached any of the wholesale grocers in the matter, and have confined our actions to a few wholesale firms in other lines only. In thinking this over more carefully I deem it essential that this part should be explained.

M. A. S.

MAKE MEN OF YOUR BOYS.

Close observation extending through many years has clearly demonstrated to the Criterion that the best way to make useful, self-reliant men of your boys is to teach them and oblige them to work a portion of each day at some helpful occupation. Show them how and encourage them in making things useful and ornamental. Take time, and if need be expend money in getting them interested in the construction of things requiring manual skill. Take them a part of the day into your stores and show them how to sell goods and how to do business. Some time you may feel that you have accumulated sufficient of this world's goods to retire from trade. You do not want to abandon a business which has required the best years of your life to build up. You naturally expect your son or sons to become your successor or successors. Are you training them in youth in such a way that you feel confident that they will be a credit and honor to you in years that are to come? Are you schooling them in the art of good management so that they may live frugally and conduct the business as wisely and judiciously as you have done, if at some future time they assume control?

We have noticed that rich storekeepers' sons as a general thing, do not amount to much. Many of them have no ambition beyond that of being a swell, which chiefly consists in scenting and bejewelling one's self and wearing gaudy apparel. Sometimes we think we would prefer to have a son turn out a smart rascal than an inane, addle-pated dude. And yet how many rich and prosperous merchants are afflicted and mortified by sons of this useless character.

We have a plan with our boys which seems to be working admirably, We have found them a pair of restless, active little fellows, who must be kept occupied in order to keep them out of mischief and away from influences. We do not permit them to roam about the town or to visit or to associate with other boys without our knowledge. We have a fine shop fitted up for them, provided with tools and material, where they make whatever they choose for playthings or home adornment. They saw wood, assist in keeping the place in order, do the marketing and other chores, for which service we pay them a regular salary. In this way they obtain their spending money ; and the oldest has already accumulated several hundred dollars, which he has invested in building association stock. Up to the present time our plan has worked admirably. The boys are learning the value and cost of a dollar, and are becoming self-reliant rather than depend upon us for what ever they want or need.

We want to make men of our boys if we can. If we fail we will not in the hereafter have occasion to reproach ourselves if they turn out poorly.

We think many make a grave mistake in allowing their boys unrestricted freedom and a liberal amount of money to squander. It saps the energy and ambition of a boy to become impressed with the idea that he is "well fixed," and that there is no need of any particular exertion on his part to get a start in the world. The most useless people in the world are those who wait for "dead men's shoes." Better for a man and a merchant by far to enjoy the comforts and recreations of life as he goes along, than to scrimp and save for thankless and greedy heirs.—Grocers' Criterion.

A reputation for truthfulness is indispensable to permanent and satisfying success.

Competition is keen and active, and the only way to meet it successfully is to buy from the best houses, and at lowest prices.

Every line of goods embodies a history and a cience worth years of study to understand.

The trader who pays his way must sell at a profit, and cannot afford to cut below others in the same line.

"One man ov genius in 97 thousand 4 hundred and 42 men of ordinary business talent, is just about the right proportion for actual business." —JOSH BILLINGS.

"There are geniuses in trade, as well as in war, or the state, or letters; and the reason why this or that man is fortunate is not to be told. It lies in the man."—EMERSON.

LONDON RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

LONDON, Sept. 16th, 1891.

The regular meeting of the London Retail Grocers' Association was held in Sherwood Hall last Wednesday. The minutes of last meeting were confirmed as read.

Seven applications were received, and by motion were admitted as members of the association.

A resolution was passed that a notice be put in each of the city daily papers requesting all drivers of grocers' rigs in the procession at the grocers' pic-nic, who have not as yet called on the secretary for their donation, be given to Oct. 1st., and that after that date the books will be closed and audited, and a report prepared for next meeting.

A committee was named to revise the constitution and by-laws of the association and report at next meeting.

Notice of motion was given that any amendment or changes of the constitution and by-laws,made and adopted at next meeting, become law on and after that date.

A communication was received from the Toronto Association requesting that delegates from London Association be appointed to attend a convention of Toronto, Hamilton and London Associations, at a date of which due notice will be given. The delegates were appointed and the secretary requested to notify the Toronto Association of the same.

A committee was appointed to revise the delinquent list, and it was moved and seconded that a new book be printed from the revised list taken from the original book kept by the secretary, and that all members be requested to furnish all information possible before the book is printed.

The meeting adjourned at 5 p. m.

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER issued weekly, subscription price $2.00 per year.

CANADA PREPARED CORN

Has been sold by every respectable grocer in Canada for more than 33 years. BECAUSE They turn out the most satisfactory work.

This Company occupies 4 flats of the GAZETTE building, in Montreal, equal to a floo space of 35,000 square feet.

The business was commenced a little over 3 years ago by A. Sabiston and from the smallest establishment at that time has grown within the above period to be the largest of its kind in the country. This fact speaks for itself.

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

A beautifully kept grocery store is sure to produce an atmosphere of taste that will make itself felt in any populous quarter where such store stands. Where one store is really attractive, neighboring stores throughout a considerable radius from it will show the ascendancy of its influence by attempts more or less successful at effects such as it has reached. They will all aim to be beautiful according to their light or means. This shows the power of example, and yields the highest flattery, that is imitation, to the local leaders in elegant shopkeeping. These may take credit to themselves very often for lifting shop-keeping in their district upon a far higher plane than they found it upon among their neighbors. Efforts made in behalf of one's own business can thus raise the general level of shopkeeping very perceptibly. The keeper of a handsome store is therefore one to whom the public owes some gratitude as a reformer in taste. This ought to be some satisfaction to him, but he needs no more than the sense of value received in the way of enhanced trade.

* * * *

The term "competition" is common enough in trade parlance to be understood. Yet its use in trade has tended to specialize the meaning, and narrow it down to the expression of but one form of competition. There are many traders to whom the word suggests no other effect but that of grading down prices. Competition with them means a strife in which opposing dealers vie with each other in the one sole matter of prices. That is a wrong idea of what competition means, and that narrow acceptance of the word is probably responsible for much of the evil of price-cutting. If traders more generally recognized that they could compete in many other ways than by that of low prices there would be less sacrifice of profit to-day and more solvency in trade. It is equally true that the excesses of competition would be less heard of, as they cannot be practised to so mischievous a degree in other forms of the principle as in that of price warfare. The benefits of it are also more obvious in nearly any other mode of manifestation.

* * * *

Take the competition, for example, in which one neighbor trader undertakes to cope with his rival as a stock keeper, or store dresser. Where a trader goes in to cast his competitor's attractions into the shade, he makes use of a means in which there are both utility and beauty as resources of attraction to customers. He will thereby certainly draw some trade. And the tax upon his inventiveness and versatility will do him good, will educate him as a shopkeeper, whereas the tax upon his profits in a price-competition very seldom builds him up financially or morally. It tends to pull him down morally, and to accustom him to look with complaisance upon the idea of forcing his ditorscre to take 50c. or thereabout on the dollar. But the dealer who moves steadily upon his opponent's custom along the line of competition in store attractiveness is pursuing a course that is healthy in all its effects. People like to go into a shop beautified by tasteful arrangement, freshened, well lighted and attended by courteous salesmen. They like the pleasant experience, and will pay a slight tribute in the way of an addition to prices often to enjoy it, particularly if the opposing dealer keeps a very disorderly looking place.

* * * *

Pleasant manners are another respect wherein traders can compete with each other. The public are not always after material returns for their money. They like to be well treated, they value considerateness and courtsey. The store keeper ought, if not from natural disposition, at least from policy, aim to be an agreeable man to meet, and to keep agreeable help about him. He will be a hard rival to do business against if he is such a man, and also makes a study of the appearance of his store. An affable, hearty manner would make a dull store bright. Much more would such a manner tell as a resource for drawing trade in a store whose appointment was as nearly faultless as it could be kept.

* * * *

These forms of competition are wholesome. They benefit not only the man who practises them but all the trade within range of his influence. An instance comes to mind of a trading quarter in a city where the stores in one line of business were noted for the lack of taste or order in the keeping of their stocks. A new comer opened up there and made a specialty of tasteful, often varied arrangement. In a few years the effect was a complete transformation of the general appearance of the quarter. Neatness had become epidemic, for it was found to pay. The trim, bright well kept stores that are to be seen to-day are the very antipodes of those that were there before the new comer came. The improvement is all due to the example of one man, to whom the city owes not a little for raising the standard of taste, but also the value of property in that quarter.

THE PETTY TYRANNY OF CASH.

A salesman ought to have a liberal knowledge of human nature, either as the effect or the cause of his being a salesman. Not only should he have that knowledge, but he ought also to have control enough over the bent of his own idiosyncracies to be able to humor the whims of people, no matter how trying they are. The man who can do this without too much waste of nervous force has learnt the most important lesson taught in the salesroom. He requires to be something of a philosopher to practise it. Egotism, above all things must be effaced, yet in a knowledge of his own nature must he first look for the secret motives that underlie the eccentricities and perversities of customers. To know how to work with the grain of a possible buyer is hard enough usually, but actually to work with it is many times harder. The grain is often very wayward and frequently doubles on the edge that would cut with it, and what can work freely in direction with the windings of a knot? The salesmen whose equanimity is not disturbed by contact with such natures are as rare as saints. The constant suppression of one's own opinions or knowledge in the face of the most vulgar ignorance is hard but wholesome. It is the sort of schooling which makes the perfect salesman. The malicious desire to get the salesman to make conflicting statements, the miserable artifices to beat down prices, the mean attempts at bluff, the petty criticisms, the affected indifference as to buying, all these things are apt to inflame a man's blood if he is not a stoic in self-control. We have seen a man whose very boot toes itched to kick his tormentor, stand in seeming tranquillity and suffer the utmost irritation and yet make no sale. That salesman was a well-disciplined man, though naturally a hot-headed one.

The necessity to avoid running counter to a customer's faults and of flattering his vanity, is a necessity that Cash imposes. Those whose trade is considerable and whose money is sure, may be as boorish as they please, they consider, and it is usually more profitable not to disabuse their minds of this error. It is an easier matter, hard though it be, for a salesman to educate himself to passive toleration of his customers' aggravating manners, than it is for him to educate the customers to better manners. What makes customers good to the salesmen is their power to give ready money or its equivalent for goods. Not that the salesman ought to be a sordid man, but he must look out to make no enemies among eligible customers. But the credit customer is satisfied with more brusque treatment. It is well to remember, however, that he may have cash some day, and then he may remember where civility was unstinted.

THE USE OF A STORE WINDOW.

No matter how little or much you spend on newspaper advertising, never omit the valuable and inexpensive method of drawing public attention by the display of goods in your store window. Hundreds of people pass your door every hour, of whom a large percentage are in quest of, or need articles which you keep in stock, and if your window is so arranged as to attract attention, very little further effort is necessary to effect the sale.

Some years ago, among a certain class of so-called "exclusive tradesmen," it was thought the proper thing to have dark blue curtains lowered to conceal half the height of the windows, which were entirely empty save for a gilt sign or mirror in the rear; but the traders of to-day vie with each other in their efforts to attract attention and admiration from the passing throng, by the display in their windows; indeed to such an art has this mode of advertising become that we find in our larger cities many individuals who earn large incomes by their skillful service in artistic window dressing, and in Chicago there has been published for some time a journal which treats entirely of this subject. It is, therefore, not the intention of this article to furnish any new ideas upon the subject, but rather to impress upon the mind of traders the importance of bestowing great care upon his window display.

The quickest route to the public pocket is via the eye, and it is, therefore, to the sense of color, size, and pleasing combination, which window display must cater. The first thing to do is to keep the glass perfectly clean and free from streaks or dust, and the woodwork tastefully painted in a subdued color which will harmonize with the surroundings; nothing repels a transient customer more than an unwashed and fly-specked window, and the brighter the lights within, the more prominent appears the dirt upon the surface of the glass. The inside of the window at the back and sides should be covered with cloth, or paint which will reflect the light without color upon the goods, and not detract the attention, but a pleasing background for the display; plain white, red, yellow are too glaring and offend the eye, while wine, olive, old gold and others, either entire or in combinations, attract the eye and add to the appearance of the goods.

If the window is small its size may be apparently enlarged by the use of mirrors, at the sides and rear, to duplicate by reflection the articles displayed. A platform of steps made in movable sections, and covered with cloth, is essential to the display of many small articles and admit of easy change and arrangement of the goods. The light for the window should be reflected from the outside for the reason that gas or electric jets in a window detract from the appearance of the goods and form shadows, besides covering the glass with steam which turns to ice in winter; and even if the window is so ventilated as to prevent this, the heat or gas produced is often injurious to the goods.

In arranging the articles in the window, the effect must be considered from the outside, which can only be ascertained by stepping out occasionally as you arrange to observe how the goods combine. One often sees articles appear "left handed" and "looking backward" in store windows, because the one who arranged them failed to consider them from an outside standpoint. Another point to keep in mind is to have some of the goods a little in advance of the season to catch the eye of those thrifty individuals who "take time by the forelock" and buy for future needs; and to turn the public attention to the fact that you are well prepared for their coming wants. Goods which are new or novel should find a place in the window, not only to force their sale, but to keep the public interested in your store and merchandise. If you are advertising any particular article in the newspaper, have a variety of the goods in the window and if the value was stated, attach a tag "as advertised" with the price to the article; by this means, if your advertisement has caught the eye of somebody who needs the goods the display reminds him of it, when he passes your store, and may prevent a competitor from profiting at your expense. It is a good plan, regardless of your other advertising, to have many of the articles tagged with the price, and some remark as to their use, if of a novel character. Many people admire goods in store windows, but dislike to come in and ask the price, as they do not expect to buy, but if the cost was plainly marked so that "he who runs may read," they would remember the price and buy later, and perhaps tell somebody else who needed the goods. To make "somebody tell somebody else" is the result sought after by shrewd traders who recognize the value of such personal advertisement of their goods and prices.

TRUTHFUL ADVERTISING.

The King's Jester for September contains an article on truth in advertising, in which the veracious grocer is made to speak of his wares as follows:—

"Our finest white bleached Coney Island and Rockaway Sand is gradually superseding the granulated sugar of the past."

"Try our excellent mixed coffee; a splendid blending of Burnt Bread and Old Government Java; 25 cents a pound, cheap at 10 cents."

"There is absolutely no Butter in our Oleomargarine."

"Our half-cured hams are going fast, judging by the smell of them. They are real 'live' bargains now."

"No better or more able-bodied cheese in the market than we now handle. It will call at customers' houses personally for inspection if so desired."

PICTON'S CANNERIES.

Says "Rambler" in the Kingston Whig : The crowning industry of Picton is perhaps its canning factories. The goods of W. Boulton & Sons are known and sought after by dealers in the principal markets of the old land to which large shipments of goods are constantly being made. Mr. Boulter has just returned from an extended trip to our great North-West and the Pacific coast and has his pocket-book filled with large orders. There is a large branch factory in connection with Mr. Boulter's farm in Demorestville, but how they will be able to fill all their orders is a mystery to your correspondent. One thing is certain their customers will find them equal to the occasion. Another large factory, rivalling the one previously referred to, is that of A. C. Miller & Co. I visited this factory and was courteously shown through the different departments. In one building were skilled mechanics making the cans, for which 3,000 boxes of tin plate will be used this season ; in another department they were busy receiving tomatoes, which were passed to a long line of women and girls who were peeling them, and, with the canning, cooking, sealing, testing, labeling and packing departments, make up busy hives of industry. On the premises are boilers, one of 60 and one of 120 horse power, which supply steam necessary for the different machines and cooking requirements. This factory, in its busy time, employs about 20 men and 120 women and girls. Their goods are put up in 2 lb., 3 lb. and gallon cans, and consist of raspberries, strawberries, currants, plums, corn, tomatoes, beans, apples, etc. They expect their output this season to be about 1,000,000 of cans. To supuly the necessary syrups they will use nearly 300 barrels of sugar. They find a market for their goods in England, and in Canada from Nova Scotia to the Pacific coast.

LOBSTER FISHERIES.

Next to the mackerel catch, the lobster fisheries on the New England, Canadian and Newfoundland coasts are being watched with more than ordinary interest. The demand, therefore, from Europe and the Continent is expected to be heavier than in 1890, and hence the fisheries have been pushed with increased energy. The catch this year has been large, but stocks were so well taken last year that canners have felt justified in again raising prices.

The Massachusetts catch is said to be fully up to the average ; but while the output is comparatively small, it has, nevertheless, become an important factor in the market. The provisions of the lobster law are being strictly enforced, and it is confidently believed that the supply will increase under State protection. The natural and artificial means which are being used to assist propagation are being in large part counteracted by the presence in the waters of large quantities of the natural enemies of the lobster.

On the main coast the catch this year has been smaller than usual. This result is due to the non-observance of the lobster laws in previous years, which has caused a rapid falling off in the supply. The law requires that no lobster under 10½ inches be taken, unless for canning purposes, and that none be used in the factories under nine inches. The statute also forbids fishermen taking egg-bearing lobsters. All these provisions have been flagrantly violated, as nothing has been done to secure their enforcement.

The weather on the Nova Scotia coast has been very favorable for lobster fishing, and the large profits which were realized last year by both canners and fishermen have stimulated them to push the industry, and secure a larger output than in 1890. It is said that orders have been received by the provincial canners from England, France and Germany which will take almost the entire production of this year. The United States offers a good market for fresh lobsters from the provinces. In 1890 our receipts from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec amounted to 29,359 barrels, valued at $140,639.

There are 364 lobster canning factories in Canada and the provinces, of which sixty-six are owned by citizens of the United States. It required 554,541 traps in 1890 to provide these factories with lobsters. The canneries are said to have employed last year 28,818 men, women and boys. The report of Andrew R. Gordon to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries of Canada contains the following: "The lobster fishery of 1890 was, speaking generally, a great improvement over that of 1889. On the Atlantic coasts of Nova Scotia the weather was somewhat stormy during the season, and, as a consequence, the catch was smaller there than in the previous year. The extraordinary advance in price has made the business a very profitable one to the packer, though I am not aware of any case in which the fishermen have been permitted to share in the increased profit. In the Gulf of St. Lawrence the total pack will be found to have exceeded considerably that of 1889, and it is satisfactory again to be able to say that in the early part of the season, at least, the size of the lobster showed considerable improvement."

The total exports from Canada and the provinces of canned lobsters last year amounted to 8,001, 355 pounds, valued at $99,654. The principal importers of these goods, with their amounts and values, were as follows:

	Pounds.	Values.
Great Britain.....	3,420,775	$436,432
United States.....	3,851,447	460,317
France	570,280	79,865
Germany.....	130,258	18,060
Belgium.....	11,232	1,404
British West Indies...	10,196	723

Nova Scotia is the largest Canadian importer of canned lobsters, her shipments last year amounting to 6,424,664 pounds, valued at $816,114. The exports from New Brunswick in 1890 amounted to 769,550 pounds, valued at $84,547; those from Prince Edward Island being 761,765 pounds, valued at $90,504; and from Quebec, 44,776 pounds, valued at $6,440.

The recent closing of sixty British lobster factories in the district claimed by the French in Newfoundland is a retaliatory measure for the refusal by the Newfoundland Government to allow the French fisherman to buy bait in Fortune and Placentia Bays. The French own fishing rights in St. Pierre, Miquelon, and Langley Islands, and on the coast of Newfoundland from Cape Ray to the Straits of Belle Isle. When the old treaties were made between England and France, lobsters had no commercial value. Their abundance on the west coast has naturally been a great inducement to capitalists to erect factories there, and in this enterprise the English have outstripped the French, there being five canneries owned by British subjects to one operated by the French. The failure of the shore cod fishery and the refusal by the French to allow American vessels to take bait from any point in their district has limited the fishermen to the catching of lobsters, an industry which has netted them very profitable returns owing to the good demand which has been made by the British canneries. The closing of the factories not only deprives the fishermen of a market for their single fish product, but as the United States depends upon these canneries for a large part of its supplies, the effect will be seriously felt in this country. As this action of the French tends to bring the troubles between them and the fishermen of Newfoundland to a crisis, dealers here believe that it must result in breaking down the restrictions which each has placed against the other, and that thus our fishermen will be permitted to exchange supplies with the French as freely as they do now with the British subjects on the island.—Bradstreet's.

THE GROWING AND CURING OF TEA.

Tea is a shrub indigenous to India—not imported from China. It is planted out on the estate generally as a small nursery plant, in line and at measured distance from its neighbors. It grows at an elevation, but quicker at a low elevation. I have known tea to grow higher in one year than I could reach at a low elevation, while in the high districts it would take two or three years to attain the height of say six feet. When fully matuted, it is pruned down to 20 inches, the result being a flush of young wood. This is what is wanted for "leaf," but to allow the bush an opportunity to give us a surface to pluck from it is left for a time. The leaf is then plucked, not from the sides, which increases the surface, but the top. Two leaves and a half are used for manufacture, those lower down being considered two coarse.

In plucking, we have three grades of tea, namely the terminal leaf bud, and the very small leaf called "flowery" or "orange" Pekoe. Then comes the medium leaf, called "Pekoe," and lastly the largest and coarsest, called Pekoe Souchong. All are plucked and, put in the basket indiscriminately to be sifted out after manufacture. Twice a day the baskets of tea leaf are taken to the factory and spread out thinly on canvas to wither, that is, become soft and pliable. The leaf thus spread out in the evening would be ready for rolling next day. It will be observed from the above illustration that the withering takes place in the interior of the factory, not in the sun. When sufficiently withered the leaf is let down through a funnel into the "roller," which has taken the place of the hands and feet of the great unwashed. This machine consists of a receptacle for the leaf, on which the pressure is automatically applied. The rolling surfaces, which move at right angles to one another, but appear by a peculiar crank motion to be revolving, are made of wood, so that the tea leaf does not come in contact with any metal.

The tea when rolled is received in a trolly from the bottom of the machine and appears like cooked spinach and green. If fired immediately it would be a pure green tea and would in process of firing turn black. It is, however, laid thickly on a table or in drawers for a season to oxidize, and in an hour it will have commenced to turn from green to a bright brown color. This is a matter which requires careful attention, as over-fermenting or under-fermenting alters the flavor entirely. Only the practiced eye can decide, and it decides at a glance, when the tea is right. When it is comes the firing. Several machines have been invented for this purpose, but I presume the sirocco is the one most commonly used. This is a machine which looks like a very large T, and is known as the T sirocco. Along the top are trays upon which the leaf is spread thinly. Below is the furnace and hot air pipes heating, if I remember right, to about 180 degrees. Two coolies tend the machine—one at each end—and pass the trays through until it is black and crisp.
